It is not clear whether Kiely had a relationship with the older woman, authorities said.

Under the state's sentencing guidelines, third-degree criminal sexual conduct is punishable by an 18-month prison sentence that a judge can suspend for a first offender.

In the earlier incident that Kiely allegedly was aware of, the adults involved later pleaded guilty to charges of third-degree criminal sexual conduct. On March 31 they were put on probation for three years, with one condition of probation being that they complete a treatment program for sex offenders, court records show.

The Kiely case was turned over to the police department's internal-affairs division after family-violence investigators learned that a police officer allegedly was involved. Capt. Bruce Lindberg, head of internal affairs, said an investigation into possible disciplinary action is pending.

Bouza said Kiely has no sustained complaints in his personnel file. He has served in the Fourth Precinct, which covers much of north Minneapolis, for nine years. He was first assigned to the Third Precinct in south Minneapolis.
