Engage to Win - Persuasive Response

WHEN PERSON MAKES EVERY LOCAL RACE ABOUT TRUMP

Common Ground:

"If we want to solve local problems, shouldn't local elections be about local concerns, not national politics?"

Model Response:

"Here in Garfield County, most families aren't talking about Washington.

They're worried about whether they can afford to put protein on their family's dinner plate after filling up the car, whether their kids will be able to buy a home here, whether our farms and ranches will have the water they need, and whether we'll continue to have the energy and agriculture jobs that keep this community strong. Those aren't Republican or Democrat issues—they're Garfield County issues.

I worry that when every local race becomes a referendum on a president 1,500 miles away, we stop asking candidates the questions that actually affect our lives.

Shouldn't we judge local candidates on how they'll lower the cost of living, protect our water, strengthen our schools, and keep our communities thriving—not simply on which side they're on in the latest national political fight?"

Whether it's the study of metallurgy by the prospective welder, the works of Lord Tennyson by the future English teacher or, perhaps best, interchangeably by both, education is central to ...
