Dr Sophie Delivers for Mackellar

Residential batteries and small business tax cuts are on the front pages of newspapers today, thanks to Dr Sophie Scamps' clear and consistent advocacy on both those issues.

As reported in The Australian, the Council of Small Business Organisations Australia has today launched a campaign to push the major parties on tax reform for businesses. This echoes Dr Scamps' call for a tax-free threshold for small businesses. So businesses can reinvest and grow.

And the government has indicated it will soon release a plan to help households buy home batteries, in order to cut their energy bills. Only two weeks ago, Dr Scamps released a detailed policy to the same effect.

"I'm incredibly proud to be able to deliver for my community on these key policy fronts. That's the power of community independents: we listen to our community, we advocate for their needs and we move the dial", Dr Scamps said.

"The major parties are noticing, and reorienting their policy positions based on our advocacy. And the community is grateful, feeling seen and heard for the first time in a long time."
