On January 26, an explosive device was allegedly thrown into a crowd of peaceful protesters in Perth.

Acts of violence or attempted violence like this are unacceptable. This sort of event should be viewed as an act of terrorism and treated with the gravity it deserves by state and federal police forces.

Last week, the Federal Parliament legislated stronger gun and hate speech laws aimed at preventing acts of violence and attempted violence. If we don't enforce our laws—equally and fairly—we don't protect all Australian communities.
