Malini grew up in Monmouth County, attending high school at the Ranney School, where she graduated second in her class. She went on to attend Yale University, where she initially studied biology before graduating with a degree in political science. Malini worked for short periods in local New Jersey and New York City government and at non-profit organizations before moving abroad to London, where she initially worked for local government. While still living in London, Malini pursued a Masters degree in journalism and worked at the Financial Times newspaper, where she covered companies, stock markets, the media business and the pharmaceutical industry. She then went on to specialize in medical journalism, working as a science editor with a team of reporters covering R&D for a pharmaceutical newsletter and website owned by the UK publishing company Informa. While there, Malini won the company's "Best Journalist of the Year" award. Finally, Malini moved back to New Jersey and continues to cover medical research for a number of publications. Her wideranging interests and hobbies include public policy, communication and journalism, music, sports, travelling, languages and culture, and community involvement.

Dear Middlesex County Democrats,

I am writing this letter to inform you that I intend to run as a Democratic candidate for Assembly in LD12 in 2019. I hope to secure the support of the Middlesex County Democrats.

Thank you,
