Community agreements:

1. Turn on your camera & show your face so that we can continue to build community
2. Assume good intent/give people the benefit of the doubt
3. Demonstrate respect & appreciation
4. Refrain from having too many side conversations in the chat
5. Listen intently
6. Step forward, then step back (contribute, then let others do the same)
7. Speak concisely
8. Have fun!

Hi! Thank you for your presentation Ellen!

Just a note - there was a recent LA City Earth Day event at Norman O Houston Park, but there were no vegan options. This should be an important aspect of any Earth Day event, yet is often overlooked at many LA City events (sorry, no camera, poor internet right now)

19:17:24 From NV - Sam (Plant Based Treaty) to Everyone:

We can definitely help you with simple messaging on your invites to your meetings and events. It can show stats on how much water it can save and how much GHG can be lowered

Probably another area of concern is how to you help those in marginalize communities because for people of color it tends to be more expensive as lisa pointed out

19:21:25 From NV - Beatriz Sosa-Prado (she/hers/ella), Tarzana to Everyone:

We need creative messaging on plant-based nutrition. The messaging needs tone focused, specific, and culturally sensitive.

19:22:00 From VM - Alex Tangalos (she/her) - LANCSA Board to Everyone:

My only comment with events is to PLEASE make sure all foods served have clearly labeled ingredients and allergens lists. I have a tree nut allergy and you would think the vegans would be my biggest allies here, but in my experience the opposite has been true - I've been most poisoned at vegan establishments, especially since so many vegan foods are secretly nut-based. Please label your foods! 😊

19:23:41 From NV - Sam (Plant Based Treaty) to Everyone:

Replying to "great point, Alvin -- you are definitely right tha...":

staple plant based foods such as rice, bean, grains, legumes and produce are actually the most economical items to be purchased. there are certain items/products such as vegan cheese that could be more expensive but overall plant based food is 30% cheaper than meat products

19:23:57 From Wes Chuang to Everyone:

19:26:03 From VM - Alvin Waters to Everyone:

I did find a lot of caribbean recipies in my cook book that are vegan based. I think the key is longevity in education because otherwise if you force it you will get hard push back

19:26:05 From NV - Periel Stanfield to Everyone:

Replying to "I wouldn't call being vegan "elitist". It's not "...":

19:32:13 From NV - Suzel Bertrand to Everyone:

One of the inherent problems I see for larger adoption is that there are still some major hesitancy having (your) kids to adopt a PB diet. Meaning, kids grow up eating a certain way which they then have to unlearned later on in life... Any messaging to family reg. health benefits - or lack of harm - to kids' growth would be very beneficial it seems...\

Replying to "Another interesting fact- a recent study in France...":

I think there's definitely an intersection with class here too, because it's seen as "manly" to be a provider and spend money on luxuries. I had a LONG conversation with my dad where he was, very sweetly, offering to pay for me to take an uber from the airport, and I was insisting that no, it's not just that I am penny pinching here, I genuinely prefer public transit and even with all the money in the world I would still take the bus/train when feasible. He couldn't understand it since for him, growing up poor meant that driving was a luxury that he now wanted to pass onto his kids as a "provider."
