

NURSING AMERICA BACK TO FREEDOM

The Divine Duty of American Christian Mothers

Today's America is grossly immature—in captivity to the dictates of agencies foreign to our American way of self-government. America is unable to solve national problems with honor as an example of national maturity and national security in the neighborhood of nations.

It is not news. America is ill unto death without the true American Dream—self-governance.

America is not healthy and free as she was on July 4, 1776. On that day, the infant nation was free enough, mature enough to throw off the yoke of antichristian bondage by declaring a shift from dependence upon a seeable lawgiver in King George III to a firm reliance upon the unseen Lawgiver—the King of King George, the unseen King Jesus.

By 1783 the fledgling six-year-old nation, without diminishing the individual liberties of its people, protected families by defeating the most formidable military power in the world—the centuries-old British Empire!

How was that possible?

Mothers.

As much as every righteous action depended on fathers governing and leading, mothers were a vital instrument to conceiving, carrying, birthing, and nursing individual Americans as a free people—a free nation.

It's one thing America's founding fathers have but precious little remembrance in the average household. But what of the patriotic mothers responsible for nursing the infant republic?

Mothers, as protectors of their husband's homes, have a delightful duty to cultivate the nation's conduct and quality of character and conscience. That is to say, America was born out of the distinctly American Christian self-governing home, not out of the pagan views of God, man, law, and government prevalent in America today.

The character training of children is, above all other aspects of home life, the number one priority of mothers where well-ordered liberty and freedom burn in the bosom of motherly nurturing.

American Christian historian Verna Hall wrote, "The colonial homes, with their concern for the character of the young, are a very important factor at the beginning of America."

The deep deprivation of character training in the average home in America is the cause of materialism, oppression, and tyranny—a faith without virtue, which is the definition of corruption. Individuals raised in such homes are Americans by the letter of being born in the USA. However, the spirit of American citizenship is being self-governed in the USA. The mothers of America's founding era possessed the sacred fire of liberty and fanned that flame in their children.

Mothers, to regain a holy vision of what an American is, you must seek out historical evidence from the 18th and 19th centuries that documents the virtuous character of mothers such as Martha Washington, Mercy Otis Warren, Abigail Adams, Lydia Darrah, Jane Thomas, and many other women behind the Declaration of 1776.

These mothers, responsible for cultivating the character of a free people—a free nation, despised tyranny and oppression. These were mothers with ardent zeal; mothers with a spirit of patriotism; mothers who obeyed the King’s command to love one’s neighbor, one’s countrymen; mothers with dignity and discretion. “Strength and honor are her clothing,” says the reputable King Solomon.

Contrast that with mothers who squander time and energy in unashamed verbal fights with their husbands and other heads of households (Prov. 12:4). Such mothers are without dignity and have no regard for being a woman of virtue. Have you experienced such degradation of virtuous character? I have—it is unsightly. It mars both the outward and inward beauty of the female. Further, it makes the work of patriotic men exceedingly difficult.

Americans are in the current mess of God’s judgment because generations of mothers have denied their duty to train their children in virtue, though they profess faith. These mothers pursue interests outside the home to the detriment of household peace and order. God will not be mocked—whoever sows selfishness will reap corruption. This is an undeniable law. It cannot be broken without consequence.

The marketplace is full of mothers advancing the visions of men other than their husbands, or worse yet, advancing the vision of another woman who believes she is free to pursue her rights with little regard for the effects on family government and, thus, the nation.

Correcting this national wrong is not a political party solution but is governmental. Vote for your family first. America needs mothers who regard home life as a glorious place of freedom training—character and conscience.

On this note, America's first schoolmaster, Noah Webster, stated, "All government originates in families, and if neglected there, it will hardly exist in society...The foundation of all free governments and of all social order must be laid in families and in the discipline of youth...."

Mothers, the rebirth and nursing of America back to relational, economic, spiritual, and civil health will require a sacrifice today of your self-life—loving your country through your family. Ascend the mountain of Christian character to serve your children and grandchildren with what they need, not what they want. They need liberty and freedom to exercise their God-delegated, unique individuality. Show them you know the Author of Liberty by training them out of selfishness and into the power of the King's love when it truly counts.

Be occupied with nurturing America back to freedom by training your children and grandchildren in the art and practice of Christian self-government—the basis for America's independence. Without self-government, America will continue to decline into perpetual immaturity and helplessness. Without self-government, America depends on bureaucratic agencies and other nations to do good.

Dependency upon others is not the character of Christ. Being independently dependent upon the heavenly Father for those things His anointed Son commands is the government of our unseen King indwelling you by His Spirit of liberty.

Need help getting started or enhancing your current training regimen? I have developed a strategy to move parents forward.

My wife and I have trained our children in America's freedom of Christian self-government for twenty-two years. As a result, our home experiences well-ordered liberty over enemies of our family government—that's the true American Dream! Independence to govern yourself!

The governing principle of Christian self-government is introduced in my forthcoming book, What Is An American? How The Virtuous Government of America's Unseen King Deals a Death Blow to the Evils of Socialism, Marxism, and Communism. Learn more at www.LibertyIsTheLaw.us.
