

BRITAIN'S SHAME

Over 100,000 British girls - sexually abused, raped, tortured, trafficked and even murdered!

THE

GROOMING GANG COVER-UP

Over one hundred thousand British girls have been the victims of sexual abuse, rape and trafficking and some have even been murdered. These crimes have taken place over a forty year period - and are still taking place today in towns and cities up and down the country.

But despite the scale and severity of these crimes, they have largely been covered up by the police and social services, and ignored by the political establishment and those within the mainstream media.

The reason for this cover-up is no doubt the ethnic component of these crimes. It is clear that the media, the police, social services and politicians are all more concerned about protecting the 'multicultural' status quo than they are about protecting British girls - girls who have as a result of this cover-up suffered in silence for decades.

This cover-up goes so far that police officers in some areas of the UK were told to 'find other ethnicities' to investigate. There have been cases where the police arrested the fathers of girls being abused for attempting to free their daughters from the clutches of their abusers. In other harrowing cases girls who had been raped dozens of times tried to report their abuse to the police and were instead arrested themselves.

The sheer size and scale of this scandal cannot be underestimated and exposes the lengths that the establishment will go to in order to protect their 'multicultural project' from criticism.

We believe that British girls should be safe to walk the streets of Britain any time of the day or night. We believe that victims of abuse should never have to suffer in silence. But most of all, we believe that those in positions of power who helped to cover-up cases of grooming and silence victims should be placed on trial for their complicity in those crimes.
