

ROYAL SECRETS

Historians have accused the royals of being more secretive than MI5 and the CIA

The royals are not covered by the same laws as the rest of us.

Charles and William do not have to pay taxes, and they refuse to say what tax they do pay.

The royals are hiding millions of official documents in their 'family' archive in Windsor Castle.

Republic is calling for an end to royal secrecy. And an end to the secretive monarchy.

ROYAL CORRUPTION INQUIRY

Republic has called on MPs to launch a full-blown inquiry into royal corruption. The royal family are accused of abusing public office for personal gain. Corruption doesn't have to be criminal, as rules are often tailored to suit those in positions of power and influence.

The royals stand accused of:

- using public money for personal costs;
- using official access to government ministers and classified information to lobby for legal exemptions;
- keeping, using and failing to declare gifts;
- interfering in the affairs of government to pursue political projects;
- receiving money from overseas without due diligence and from people of questionable repute;
- colluding with agents from hostile states;
- hiding public records in their private archives;
- using their privileged position to demand excessive secrecy and more.
