LaRouche Warned of Wall St Bubble Burst

Sare: Create a New Economic Platform Now!

Special to New Federalist
NEW YORK, Feb. 12—Today marks the third anniversary of the passing of the world's greatest physical economist, the statesman Lyndon H. LaRouche, Jr., who had forecast the now-onrushing collapse of the trans-Atlantic financial system. As LaRouche uniquely understood, what is happening is not part of a cyclical boom-bust type collapse, or something merely worse than the Great Depression, which most people believe began with the collapse of the Wall Street stock market on Oct. 29, 1929. This is the "big one"—the end of the several-hundred-year-old British-Dutch monetarist system. It is an irreversible systemic collapse, which demands a new system to replace it. Any attempt to keep this decayed system in place is not only impossible, but will mean the likely death of hundreds of millions, if not billions of people. The process of this mass death can already be seen in the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, during which a large part of the trans-Atlantic leadership clearly said, "let them die."

"There is no possibility of a non-collapse, none!" said LaRouche in a public webcast on July 25, 2007, and he was right, as became undeniable in 2008. Since then, the Wall Street crooks and the so-called economists have created their own delusions of growth with round after round of so-called "quantitative easing" propped up by record levels of personal and corporate debt. The entire trans-Atlantic system is hopelessly bankrupt and cannot be saved.
Create a New System
A new system must be established by agreement among the world's most powerful nations, including the United States, China, Russia, and India, as LaRouche proposed over 25 years ago. This would be a new "Bretton Woods" system, with fixed exchange rates based on a gold reserve, and specifically dedicated to enormous emissions of credit to promote real, physical economic development, as opposed to driving up share values and enriching corporate bureaucrats and speculators.

Contrary to the gobbledygook uttered by Harvard "economists" in the pages of the New York Times, who claim that the US economy has "bounced back" amazingly from what they claim was a virus-driven collapse, with "record low unemployment" and over 5% "real" growth (in spite of some troubling inflation, they are forced to admit), the reality is that the trans-Atlantic financial system has entered the final shock front phase of the "Triple Curve Typical Collapse Function" which LaRouche presented to audiences in Europe and the United States in late 1995 and early 1996. (see illustration)

Senate candidate Diane Sare says that LaRouche's Triple Function Collapse Curve, shown here, spells doom for the Trans-Atlantic financial system.

1971, Richard Nixon, under the direction of the fascist economist George Schultz, decoupled the U.S. dollar from the gold reserve system, thus dismantling the Bretton Woods system and unleashing a speculative orgy based on floating exchange rates which today sees trillions of dollars changing hands, but with no actual growth of physical output of the economy. In fact, as illustrated by the two rising curves, the amount of money and financial instruments are in inverse proportion to investment in physical production or in infrastructure which would be necessary.

New York's 'Freedom Spring'

by Diane Sare

With the world hurtling at break-neck speed towards a thermonuclear confrontation among superpowers, with the economy headed towards an unprecedented systemic collapse with dire consequences for the people of this country and state, and with the pandemic not under control, but with officials apparently ready to give up on fighting it, our people desperately need to hear the voice of a new leadership—one that will replace the corrupt, Wall Street-dominated fraudsters that got us into this mess.
I will express my unique qualification to lead this fight in the words of my mentor, the brilliant economist and statesman Lyndon LaRouche, who once said, "In the land of the blind, the one-eyed man is king." As a candidate independent of the corrupt political parties and the forces that control them, I represent the spearhead of a desperately needed new leadership. However, I face what are intended to be insurmountable obstacles to my candidacy in the form of new, exceedingly difficult, ballot access requirements, designed to prevent New York voters from having any al-

Will NATO 'Ukraine Hoax' Provoke Thermonuclear War?

Special to New Federalist
NEW YORK, Feb. 15—"There is no doubt that the psyops, the psychological warfare that has been mounted now for months, is an indication that NATO intends to have a war. But a war for what? All they had to say, was that Ukraine, because it has a pre-existing territorial dispute with its neighbor Russia, cannot join NATO, and that therefore, no NATO armies and weapons, including nuclear weapons, will be sighted in Ukraine, at least until Ukraine no longer has a territorial dispute with its neighbor... That's all they had to say, but they would not say it." Former British parliamentarian and RT journalist George Galloway asked that question Feb. 12 as the world stood poised to see whether phone discussions between President Joe Biden and Russian President Vladimir Putin, including those mediated through Germany's Olaf Scholz and France's President Emmanuel Macron, might result in a scaling back from the brink, or should this effort fail, lead to an inexorable slide into total war.

On Feb. 12, LaRouche Independent Candidate for U.S. Senate Diane Sare released a short statement on Facebook entitled, "Russia is Not Invading Ukraine."

The Russian Defense Ministry released photos Feb. 16 of tanks and other armor being removed from the positions near the Ukraine border.

Don't believe the Pro-paganda.," in which she reported on the comments of Russian Foreign Ministry Spokeswoman Maria Zakharova, who said on Feb. 7, "The well-known psychedelic phobias by Western media about the 'Russian aggression against Ukraine' are under development in the forthcoming composition. However, time marches on and Russia is not attacking Ukraine. The calculation by the US who ordered this 'tune' and the British who joined the bandwagon is clear; they cooked up 'the Russian threat' themselves, they braced themselves for a 'heroic fight' against it, in order to commit a provocation and loudly declare their 'victory.'" This statement has over 1K Comments, 4,300 Shares, and 77K Views.

On Feb. 13, Sare posted an update, warning of a potential "provocation," perhaps in the form of an attack by Ukrainian fascists on the Russian-speaking people of the Donbas region, which would impel Putin to forcibly respond.
Tension Remains High
As of this writing, the situation remains fraught with tension. Unknown to most Americans, the Ukrainian Army has been shelling the Russian speaking Donbas region's breakaway republics of Donetsk and Luhansk for the last 7 years, in blatant violation of the Minsk Accords, and there are now 100,000 Ukrainian troops on

Will Pandemics, Death Become the New Normal?

Special to New Federalist
NEW YORK, Feb. 13—This week, led by former Obamacare advisor Ezekiel ("EZ Kill") Emanuel, American public health officials and politicians effectively threw in the towel on what had already been a merely half-hearted effort to defeat the Covid-19 pandemic. They declared the pandemic to have become "endemic" i.e. "the new normal," basically not worth tracking or fighting, except to arbitrarily enforce vaccine mandates while simultaneously eliminating standard public health measures like masking and distancing, while continuing to close so-called "unprofitable" health care facilities.
As the Omicron wave recedes, New York Governor Kathy Hochul ended indoor mask mandates at businesses, as has been done across the country in both blue and red states. Sources report that the CDC will likely recommend that school children no longer be required to wear masks. This despite the fact that thousands remain hospitalized, and that saner officials warn that there is already evidence of new COVID variants, including in New York City.

More Deaths Than in All Wars
Deaths from the corona virus have passed the 900,000 mark in the United States, and approach six million deaths worldwide. To put this in perspective, the 900,000 plus deaths from Covid-19 is greater than the number of people killed in combat in all wars fought by this country since our Revolution of 1775-1781! With much of the world still living in hideous conditions of poverty and starvation, there is no reason to believe that the virus and its deadly mutations will cease its march across the globe, leaving millions of dead in its wake, and then surging again in the so-called "advanced sector".
Unfortunately, most officials are following the strategy of former Obama health advisor Ezekiel "EZ-kill" Emanuel, who in recent published tracts has argued that

On Feb. 10, the Schiller Institute and the Russian International Affairs Council (RIAC) held a joint video conference, "The Humanitarian Crisis in Afghanistan: Toward a Long-term Solution." Among the topics addressed by the panel of six speakers were: "What are the causes of the Afghan humanitarian crisis? What are the geopolitical implications of a failed state in Afghanistan? What is needed to reverse the immediate threat of mass starvation and refugee problems? A long-term solution to the humanitarian crisis: the role of the global powers."
The 2 hour conference began at 8 a.m. EST to facilitate its streaming to a Russian audience via the RIAC website. Opening and closing statements were presented by Dr. Andrey Kortunov, Director General of RIAC, and Helga Zepp-LaRouche, chairwoman of the Schiller Institute. The other panelists, who each made 10 minute presentations, were: Ivan Safranchuk, Director at the Center for Eurasian Studies of MGIMO University; Temur Umarov, Fellow at the Carnegie Moscow Center; Jim Jatra, U.S. diplomat and former advisor to U.S. Senate Republican leadership; and Graham Fuller, 25 year career CIA operations officer and author. Following the presentations, a frank dialogue among the participants ensued.
While there was general agreement on the need for an immediate large scale aid program, the Russians were generally pessimistic about American involvement, while Zepp-LaRouche, who has proposed a comprehensive program called Operation Ibn Sina (see article, page 4) believed that no such rescue effort could succeed without U.S. participation. All supported a return of seized Afghan central bank assets, but the Russians were skeptical that the U.S. would relent on this, since the funds basically were donor aid from the west. Zepp-LaRouche also challenged the perception of the Russians that the United States was beyond being shamed for what has happened, saying that the nation was not shameless, even if some of its leaders were. All agreed that whatever one thought of the Taliban, that they are now the government and have to be dealt with; if the Taliban government were to collapse, it would plunge the country into a deadly total anarchy. In their concluding remarks both Zepp-LaRouche and Kortunov expressed their pleasure with dialogue, which points the way towards a necessary collaboration by people of good will to solve this and other crises.
In a move widely denounced by those concerned about the immediate plight of the Afghan people, U.S. President Joe Biden has since announced that the $7B of the funds held by the New York Federal Reserve will be evenly split between the 9/11 Families and an undisclosed plan for relief, bypassing the Afghan Central bank and the Taliban.

Has Schumer’s Pot Bill Gone Up in Smoke?

Special to New Federalist
NEW YORK, Feb. 14—The word from sources close to the White House and on Capitol Hill is that the efforts of Wall Street’s favorite drug pusher—Senate Majority Leader Charles Schumer—to legalize marijuana and create a large pot industry for the benefit of corrupt bankers, has been at least temporarily derailed.

Schumer has loudly stated that the passage of his Marijuana Freedom and Opportunity Act is his highest priority, but this has apparently irked people in the White House, including President Joe Biden, as well as many of his fellow Democrats, who fear a backlash in coming elections, in which the party is already projected to have a dismal showing. Poor Schumer, who appears jacked up whenever he speaks of pot legalization, has been told to back off, and it is unclear when the bill will be acted on, despite Schumer’s promise that there will be a vote on the bill this year.

One source said that internal Democratic polling shows that they will lose votes among independents and many traditional Dems, and won’t gain much from the pro-drug lobby, whose voting is seen as unreliable. “Face it,” said someone familiar with the thinking on this, “the pothead and crackhead voting bloc is not all that large.”

Free Crack Pipes?
But before you think that this means that reality is somehow seeping into the Executive Branch, the Department of Health and Human Services revealed last week that they have issued a $30 million grant to purchase and distribute crack pipes as means of stopping the spread of the Covid-19 virus. This was too much for Senators Joe Manchin (D-WV) and Marco Rubio (R-Fla), who have submitted a bill to prevent this lunacy. Schumer and his co-sponsor Sen. Corey Booker (D-NJ) have claimed that their pot legislation would create enormous opportunities for minority-owned businesses in selling pot and pot-related products. But others have pointed out that there is no evidence that this will happen, but rather that the same big pharma, big alcohol, and big banks will pocket any of these ill-gotten gains.

NY Deals Blow
Schumer was also stunned by the number of jurisdictions in his home state which opted out of the new statewide mandate to allow pot dispensaries and lounges in every municipality. Despite Schumer’s highly visible support, nearly half of the state’s eligible jurisdictions met the “opt-out” requirement before the December 31, 2021 deadline (if municipalities

Will Mayor Adams Let the Bronx Burn?

Last month’s deadly fire in the Twin Oaks apartment building in the Bronx (shown above), in which 17 residents died, was not the last. There have been several fires since, and now investigators—some of whom are going door-to-door—report that there are literally thousands of both reported and unreported serious housing and fire code violations which will, if left unchecked, result in turning parts of the borough into a deadly inferno. To warm their apartments in the cold of winter, in many cases residents are resorting to space heaters and even kitchen stoves, because of faulty heating systems (a faulty space heater is thought to have caused the Twin Oaks blaze). The investigators also report a sense of hopelessness, as complaints both to landlords and the city for redress of their problems have gone unanswered, and few if any repairs have been made. The City admits to the massive backlog of complaints, while members of the City Fire Department continue to complain about understaffing at various Bronx stations and a lack of necessary personnel in the Fire Inspection Service. Briefed on the situation, Diane Sare, LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate, has urged the new Mayor, Eric Adams, to take “personal responsibility for this problem. He must do whatever is necessary to make sure that the Bronx and its citizens do not burn. I will give him whatever support I can to make sure this effort succeeds. This is not some partisan issue, but one of simple humanity. Wall Street and the city’s financial institutions that hold mortgages on these properties have known about these conditions for years. They have and will let the Bronx burn, while reaping profits on usurious mortgages.”

Replace NATO with New Security Architecture

to the border of this region. According to some accounts, Ukrainian President Zelensky is under intense pressure from extreme right neo-Nazi Banderist factions, (and maybe UK Prime Minister Boris Johnson, who recently visited?) to launch an invasion against this region, which would result in massive casualties or even “ethnic cleansing” of the Russian-speaking people. The New York Times and CNN, among many western media outlets, have neglected to mention that perhaps this threat to the 1.4 million ethnic Russians is the reason why Putin has kept troops on the border.

NATO membership for Ukraine would mean that all NATO forces would find themselves, according to Article 5 of the original NATO Treaty of 1949, committed to military defense of Ukraine in the event that fascist crazies from the Azov Battalion or other followers of the World War II Ukrainian pro-Nazi Stepan Bandera launched an “improvised” attack. Article 5 states: “The Parties agree that an armed attack against one or more of them in Europe or North America shall be considered an attack against them all and consequently they agree that, if such an armed attack occurs, each of them, in exercise of the right of individual or collective self-defense recognised by Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, will assist the Party or Parties so attacked by taking forthwith, individually and in concert with the other Parties, such action as it deems necessary, including the use of armed force, to restore and maintain the security of the North Atlantic area.” That area now includes the Russian border, apparently.

As Vladimir Putin said to a journalist: “Do you realize that if Ukraine joins NATO and decides to take Crimea back through military means, the European countries will automatically get drawn into a military conflict with Russia? Of course, NATO’s united potential and that of Russia are incomparable. We understand that, but we also understand that Russia is one of the world’s leading nuclear powers and is superior to many of those countries in terms of the number of modern nuclear force components. But there will be no winners, and you will find yourself drawn into this conflict against your will. You will be fulfilling Paragraph (sic) 5.....in a heartbeat, even before you know it.”

What Will Happen Unknown
Schiller Institute founder Helga Zepp-LaRouche warned her associates in a conference call on Feb. 15 that “nobody really knows what will happen, because there are so many different factors working and pulling the situation in different directions. On the one side you have the warmongers like [British Prime Minister] Boris Johnson, Chatham House, Atlantic Council, [U.S. National Security Advisor] Sullivan, [Secretary of State] Blinken, and all of these people who keep repeating that the Russian invasion of Ukraine can happen any day—Boris Johnson even says ‘any minute,’ so the drumbeat of these people is for sure escalating. And the situation on the ground is super-hot, with maybe 130,000 Russian troops somewhere along the Ukrainian border, but 100,000 Ukrainian troops on the Contact Line to the Donbas. So I would not underestimate the potential for 9/11 false-flag operations to occur there, but I will come back to that in a second.”

(This morning, the Russian Defense Ministry announced that they were pulling an undisclosed number of troops and equipment, including tanks, off the border and back to their barracks, stating that various exercises had been completed.)
So, who is pushing Ukraine into NATO, and into war? That question is being asked from too limited a frame of reference and cannot be adequately answered in the terms generally posed. One has to recall the decades-old warning of both Lyndon and Helga LaRouche that the fall of the Berlin Wall, while a defeat for the bankrupt policies of the East, did not indicate a “victory” for the British Liberal free trade system. That system is now about to implode under its own hyper-inflated weight, and war has always been the preferred solution to such a crisis for those self-declared elites who run that system.
But also, and of great import, as demonstrated by the lack of coverage in the West, there is a totally new strategic arrangement coming into being, which was announced in a joint declaration signed by Russian President Vladimir Putin and Chinese President Xi Jinping on the sidelines of the ongoing Beijing Olympics. Outside of this newspaper and the Executive Intelligence Review magazine, only writer Patrick Lawrence has, to the best of our knowledge, provided the proper context for an otherwise uninformed American reader to think about the real issue. Lawrence asserts that “on the ground is not where to look if we want to understand this long-festering crisis and its likely outcome—not as of last week. When Presidents Putin and Xi issued a declaration of mutual solidarity as the Winter Olympics opened in Beijing last Friday [Feb. 11], all changed, changed utterly...”

Lawrence refers to the combination of military, economic, scientific and cultural accords reached between those two nations for joint, long term development of the physical economic capabilities of both, and of other nations, in the form of the Belt and Road Initiative.
Dissolve NATO
The United States, goaded by the monetarists of the City Of London and Wall Street, has abandoned fundamental science-based improvements in the productive capacities of the world since the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, and now demands the destruction of the rest of the world as well. According to White House officials, the policy is to “hit Putin’s strategic ambitions to industrialize his economy quite hard... Undercut Putin’s aspirations to exert influence on the world stage.” The officials vowed, “we’re talking about denying to Russia downstream products that are critical to its own ambitions to develop high-tech capabilities in aerospace and defense, lasers and sensors, maritime, AI, robotics, quantum, etc. ... And so, as we build this effort with our allies and partners, we’re willing to work with any country in order to deny Russia an input that it needs to diversify its economy.” Since when was the destruction of the aspirations of other nations the American mission?

Credit: kremlin.ru

Russian President Vladimir Putin has spoken on the phone many times to President Joe Biden about the Ukraine crisis.

Ironically, the Anglo-Americans are seeking to use Ukraine as a pawn in this operation, and prodding the dangerously psychotic Banderistas to launch a provocation while promoting the potential membership of Ukraine in the dysfunctional and out of date NATO organization.
On Feb. 19, the Schiller Institute will be holding an international conference dedicated to creating a “New Security Architecture” which can be viewed at bit.ly/3oVHXaj. U.S. Senate candidate Diane Sare said, “I concur with the approach of the Schiller Institute and Helga Zepp-LaRouche. I think NATO has outlived its purpose and has become a menace to global security and should be dissolved.”

did not opt out by that time, pot establishments would be legally protected from that time forward). In many places, it was local law enforcement that led the charge to opt out, citing evidence from other states that such legalization would lead to increases in criminal activities and traffic accidents and deaths. Such statements of fact directly contradict Schumer, who claims that pot legalization has “no bad consequences.”

Retire “Killer Chuck” Now
“Schumer wants to keep people stoned and dumb,” said his opponent, LaRouche Independent candidate Diane Sare. “He fully embraces this rotten, mind killing drug culture, as do many people in our current leadership. Just as the British did with opium in China, Wall Street sees pot and other drugs as a way to control people, to keep them in line while they force new austerity measures down their throats. And bankers will make money as they always have from Dope, Inc., charging us for our own destruction. We must retire Wall Street’s champions of the drug lobby if we want to end this. That’s why I’m running.”

New Productive Platform Needed

sary to increase the productivity of the workforce as a whole. In other words, the more money we print and the higher the Dow Jones, the worse the actual economy is, and the nearer we are to doom.
If you doubt this is true, consider the age of the underground pipes and sewers in any major American city today. In many cases the pipes are over 100 years old. Much of the potable water is lost on the way to the tap due to broken and cracked pipes, and there is zero redundancy in the system for major repairs. A few hours of heavy rain are sufficient to cause people to drown in basements full of raw sewage, as happened in Queens last year. Bridges are collapsing, potholes are gaping, and since the closure of the two Indian Point nuclear reactors, the reliable supply of electricity to New York City is in jeopardy. Meanwhile, how many Bronx residents can we expect will perish in fires in the coming year?
As the triple curve function shows, this collapse is not linear.

As it approaches the limit, it becomes hyperbolic. The rate of the rate of collapse is accelerating. Think about what happens when a dam breaks. The pressure builds with no visible change except for rising water, but suddenly it gives way, and woe to the towns located in the path of the onrushing water. That is the state of the physical economy across the United States and the western world in general. Any single new stress, be it a weather event or a virus, and the whole thing disintegrates in a chain reaction collapse.
Create New Economic Platform
“The only way to deal with this is to scrap the current monetarist system,” said Diane Sare, LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate. “Like the broken dam, it cannot possibly be saved, and any attempts to do so will increase the death rate of the population, as we are already seeing. It must be put through an orderly bankruptcy proceeding, where the speculative garbage is written off, but the real economy and its potential and actual labor force—the homeowners, renters, pensioners, and their towns and cities—are protected. The banks must be separated by function as President Franklin Roosevelt did with the Glass-Steagall Act, which must be reinstated. The Federal Reserve must be abolished and a national bank reestablished, which can facilitate the U.S. Treasury uttering trillions of dollars’ worth of designated credit for desperately needed infrastructure, including transportation, water management, energy, food production, healthcare, and education. We must fund the research for a breakthrough in fusion energy and bring fusion power online as quickly as possible. In the meantime, we need to build hundreds of new clean, coal-fired power plants and fission nuclear plants just to supply the energy needed to power the recovery.

“We are also suffering a moral and cultural collapse which will present a challenge in mobilizing the workforce required to do such tasks,” Sare continued. “People have been conditioned by mass and social media to abhor real work, in favor of useless internet jobs and schemes to make money. Once we get the economy moving again, with the help of the Chinese (who have poured more concrete in the last five years than the United States did in the entire previous century), the magnitude of the recovery and the pace of the change will pull even “doubting Thomases” into the mobilization. We must operate on the presumption that the United States will have over one billion people by the next century, and build to prepare for that.
“If Americans insist on clinging to the lies told by the snake oil salesmen of Wall Street and London, and their spokesmen in the U.S. Senate like Chuck Schumer, they will find themselves like the Germans of the Weimar Republic did, filling their wheelbarrows with billion dollar notes to buy a Starbucks cup of coffee, and considering themselves fortunate to have not been incinerated in a nuclear war or starved to death along with hundreds of millions of people worldwide.”
The Moment of Decision
“We have arrived at the moment of decision for which Lyndon LaRouche prepared us,” concluded Sare. “With the new partnership between Russia and China for a new paradigm based on respect for the sovereignty of nations and the dignity of Man, we must inspire the American people not to be like the populace during the French Revolution, who failed to create a republic because they succumbed to petty rages and lost their vision for universal principles. We must join forces with Russia and China to defeat the global bankers who will stop at nothing to consolidate their power and instead revive our commitment to the Constitutional principles of the ‘general welfare for ourselves and our posterity.’”

Sare Campaign and New York’s ‘Freedom Spring’

ternative for the U.S. Senate this November to the drug pusher for Wall Street—and a political thug for the war party—the incumbent Chuck “Killer” Schumer (D), or clown-ish Republican “opposition” claiming to fight “socialism” while supporting the exact same war and Wall Street agenda.

In 1963, following the murder of his friend Medgar Evers (the NAACP field director for Mississippi), Roy Wilkins, head of the NAACP, said of Mississippi: “we view this [murder of Evers] as a cold, brutal, deliberate killing in a savage, uncivilized state. The most savage, uncivilized state in the entire 50 states. There is no state that approaches that of Mississippi in inhumanity, murder, brutality, and racial hatred. It is absolutely at the bottom of the list.”

In response, several hundred young people, many from New York State, descended upon Mississippi for the famous Freedom Summer the following year, 1964, fighting among other things to register African Americans to vote. Some gave their lives in this fight, but the Freedom Summer could not be stopped, and these and other efforts throughout the South gave President Johnson the impetus and support he needed to push through the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and then the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

While New York State does not exhibit either the savagery or racial hatred Wilkins spoke of as characterizing Mississippi in 1963, New York’s brutal and fascist disregard of the Constitutionally defined electoral process is definitely reminiscent of the Jim Crow laws used in Mississippi and elsewhere to enforce racial segregation and deny people the right to vote.

Today, between the actions taken to deny me and other independent and so-called minor party candidates a voice and ballot status, and the recent gerrymandering of districts to destroy longstanding community-based voting blocs, New York could become known as the Mississippi of the North.

It is up to us to honor the legacy of those who gave their lives in war and in the struggle for civil rights, to preserve our republican Constitutional form of representative government against the evils of discrimination and hatred by fighting to overturn the recent outrageous actions by the State of New York. Therefore, I will call this campaign “New York’s Freedom Spring,” after the heroic, and ultimately victorious, “Mississippi Freedom Summer.” It is in this spirit that we will wage a battle to place my name on the ballot for the New York 2022 General Election on November 8.

Keep Out Independent Voices

New York has always had difficult petition requirements, especially for statewide candidates like myself. But last fall, the political parties decided that they were going to make it even harder by tripling the signature requirement from 15,000 to 45,000, while not extending the time in which they must be collected. While they tried to conceal what they were doing by adding it to the slew of amendments to the State budget bill, after it passed, it became clear that intent was to keep $100 million in taxpayer dollars in hands of the mainstream political parties and their candidates, and away from all dissident voices.

If they succeed in keeping independent voices off of the ballot with tactics reminiscent of asking black Americans in Mississippi, “How many bubbles in a bar of soap?” in order to register to vote, the news media will feel justified in denying coverage to such candidates, and the voters will never even know how they came to be stuck with such horrible non-choices.

This is part of a national pattern of censorship of views “outside the norm,” which we see not only in the mainstream media, but in social media in outlets such as Facebook and Twitter, that can even silence the President of the United States if they don’t like what he says!

Along the same line, the Democratic-controlled legislature has absurdly redrawn Congressional districts in an open attempt to take Congressional seats currently held by Republicans. Besides eliminating the district of upstate Republican Congresswoman Claudia Tenney, the new districts are gerrymandered to bring large numbers of Democratic Party voters into the remaining seven Republican-held districts, with the intent of turning at least 3 of them over to the Democrats. This includes adding more of Brooklyn to Staten Island’s 11th CD, and including parts of Westchester County and the Bronx in Republican-leaning areas of Long Island. These new districts only make sense if the primary mode of transport is by boat! There will be an emergency hearing about this on March 3, but petitioning for the primary elections is already scheduled to begin on March 1, unless they change it at the last minute.

These tactics will look eerily familiar to those acquainted with the methods used to stop black voters in Mississippi from getting equal representation.

A Republic Without Parties

My Quaker forebears opposed over generations these policies in the South and elsewhere, and I have no intention of tolerating the revival of such arbitrary disenfranchisement of American citizens today. Our elected officials are sworn to uphold the U.S. Constitution, which includes, emphatically, a commitment to the principle of the “General Welfare” which is clearly in jeopardy, having been replaced by the interests of the Wall Street and Silicon Valley billionaires who control my opponent Senator Chuck Schumer.

Our nation is not intended to be a “democracy” where the majority, defined either in numbers, power, or money, gets to trample over the rights of the minority, especially as the minority opinion often presents solutions to thorny problems which might not have been obvious. The filibuster is one protection of this principle, which happily was saved by the actions of two courageous Democratic senators.

The December 2021 issue of The New Federalist carried an article by my colleague Charles Notley that addresses the difference between a republic and a democracy and what our founders intended, and I encourage you to read it here at bit.ly/3pitvQj.

I want you to join my campaign. I will need at least 300 people and more, to conduct this petition drive. Right now there is legislation introduced in the NY State legislature that would reverse these onerous requirements, bringing the numbers back to where they were [see article, page 4]. But that bill, though worthy of your support, has an uncertain future in a legislature dominated by the corrupt party system. So, we must prepare to get not merely the 45,000 signatures required, but at least double that to assure that the corrupt parties cannot throw enough signatures out to disqualify us—and they will try to do so.

I need you to join my campaign and to distribute this newspaper, The New Federalist, as one of your most potent weapons. We have begun to hold discussions about the petition campaign [see article, page 4] and will have more in the days ahead. So, get in touch with us at the numbers and addresses below. Join New York’s Freedom Spring, and let’s restore Abraham Lincoln’s vision of government of the People, by the People, and for the People to our state and to the nation.

Expectations for Afghanistan

This is an edited transcript of the keynote remarks by Dr. Andrey Kortunov to the seminar, “The Humanitarian Crisis in Afghanistan: Toward a Long-Term Solution,” co-sponsored by the Russian International Affairs Council (RIAC) and the Schiller Institute (SI) on Feb. 10, 2022. Dr. Kortunov is Director General of the RIAC.

Let me say that we are approximately six months after the Taliban came to power in Kabul, and I think all of us can recall quite vividly all the predictions that were made in August and in September of last year. Some of them turned out to be right; some of them turned out to be wrong. But let me just give you a couple of my observations on what could have happened in Afghanistan, and what actually didn’t happen over the last six months.

First of all, six months ago, there were expectations that the Taliban would probably move towards a more inclusive government, and that after some period of interim leadership, we would see a more representative leadership in Afghanistan, which would include the country’s ethnic minorities, first of all the Tajik minority, but not only. That it would include not only Sunnis, but also Shi’a; and that it would be more gender-balanced. I think right now we can say that these expectations did not come true. And the interim government that was established in September and in October of last year is still in place and it’s very unlikely that this government will change significantly...I don’t think we have any reasons to believe that the Taliban will undergo any abrupt and quick transformation from what it used to be before it took power, to something very different. And I think it’s understandable. If the Taliban were to move away from the fundamental principles of the movement, the odds are that quite soon it would be replaced by other groups which are even more fundamentalist and more radical in terms of how they see the future of the country.

My second observation is related to...the humanitarian catastrophe in Afghanistan. And I do recall quite vividly that six months ago there were many speculations that the Winter of 2021-22 would be a disaster; that we would see a lot of people dying from hunger, from the deficit of basic medicines, from the shortages of fuel, and the enlargement of poverty areas. And the country would be sucked into a situation of chaos and disintegration. I don’t want to underestimate that human suffering in Afghanistan definitely takes place; definitely there are deficits of food and fuel, and medical care. However, I think that right now, we can say that Afghanistan has demonstrated a significant degree of resilience...

The situation clearly is not bright, and it’s likely to deteriorate further. However, I think it’s fair to say that Afghanistan survived this half-year; and to some extent we can say that things might get slightly better in Spring, with the new agriculture season in place, with new relations with its neighboring countries. So, the situation is difficult, but the situation is not really critical for the survival of the current leadership in Afghanistan.

My third point is related to the opposition. And again, six months ago, there were expectations, and maybe even hopes, that the opposition would challenge the power of the Taliban.. But I think that right now, after half a year of the Taliban taking power, we can conclude that the current leadership was able to consolidate power in its hands, that the enclaves of opposition are relatively small, and that there is really no challenge to the Taliban, so far...

International Community Divided

Now, I also think that, if we look back at the international discussions on the Taliban during the Summer or early Fall of last year, many thought that probably the international community would come with a consolidated approach to Afghanistan, and that before too long, we would see new United Nations Security Council resolutions on how to deal with the Taliban; the international community would probably agree on the list of demands, that should create a platform for negotiations with the Taliban.

However, that has not happened. Unfortunately—in my view, unfortunately—the international community is as divided on Afghanistan as it was six months ago... So, there are some very, very general common denominators, but nothing really—not a lot beyond these very general common denominators.

...Let me say, that there were speculations that probably in half a year we would see a chain of international recognitions of the Taliban; that many countries, starting with neighboring states, but also Eurasian states around Afghanistan would opt for a formal diplomatic recognition of the country, and we would see a kind of, at least, a number of important international players engage into formal negotiations on establishing diplomatic relations with the regime in Kabul. That has not happened either... But at the same time, many players—including Pakistan, China above all, but also Russia, and Gulf States, and Turkey and many others—are trying to keep the channels of communications open. They have their own links to the Taliban, which allow them to stay more or less informed about developments in the country.

Russia’s Position

And finally... I think that as far as Russia is concerned, the events in Afghanistan should be considered through the lens of the recent developments in Kazakhstan. Because many in this country believe that the crisis in Kazakhstan made that country, and maybe even in a more general sense, the Central Asian region at large, more vulnerable to potential spillover effects coming from the south. So that creates another incentive for Central Asian countries to work closely with Russia, and arguably with China, on securing their positions and promoting the safety nets in dealing with the potential challenges that might come from the territory of Afghanistan. We clearly see divergent attitudes to Afghanistan from a number of Central Asian states, most notably the disagreements between Uzbekistan and Tajikistan on how we should approach Afghanistan, and the Taliban in particular; definitely these differences will not fade away. And they’re likely to be with us in the foreseeable future.

Let me stop here and let me say that I’m looking forward to a productive and candid discussion of this issue. Thank you.

Afghanistan: Test of Morality

This is an edited transcript of the keynote remarks by Schiller Institute founder Helga Zepp-LaRouche to the seminar, “The Humanitarian Crisis in Afghanistan: Toward a Long-Term Solution,” co-sponsored by the Russian International Affairs Council (RIAC) and the Schiller Institute (SI) on Feb. 10, 2022.

Well, I have a little bit of a different view. I think that whoever is responsible for the adoption of sanctions against Afghanistan and for the freezing of Afghan assets in the United States and in Europe, after the Taliban takeover in August, is also responsible for the following: according to German UNICEF [Executive Director] Christian Schneider, one million children under the age of five are acutely undernourished in Afghanistan, and their condition is such that, in Germany, they would have to be treated in an intensive care unit, which means that, under the current circumstances, they are likely to die. According to the United Nations, 8.7 million people are in an advanced state of starvation; 24.4 million, or 55% of the population, are in an emergency situation, which means they lack all the basic necessities of life; while 98% do not have enough to eat. More and more families are selling some of their children in the hope that the others will survive, and people are selling their organs.

The mass media in the United States and Europe, following a brief hype in August and early September, have reported almost nothing about this worst humanitarian crisis on the globe. The leaders of those NATO countries that withdrew so hastily from Afghanistan in August knew that 80% of the country’s budget came from aid provided by donor countries, and that the combination of the cancellation of these funds, the freezing of Afghan capital, and the sanctions, would strangle Afghanistan’s economy overnight.

After six months of unfolding tragedy and countless appeals that were in vain, except for a few recent small concessions, one must ask what the intent of this policy is? The argument that the Taliban first has to recognize the rights of women, and so on, becomes absurd, when those women and their children are dead. Is it the intent to sabotage the Taliban’s ability to maintain a functioning state, to such an extent that the opposition, including ISIS, al-Qaeda, drug traffickers, warlords, etc., gain the upper hand?

The consequence would be a new and bloody civil war, a hell, in which the civilian population—between hunger; freezing temperatures; COVID; epidemics such as polio, measles, Dengue fever, and diarrhea—will be crushed, and millions of refugees will attempt to seek safety in neighboring countries and in Europe. That would be the continuation of the British Empire’s “great game” of Bernard Lewis and Zbigniew Brzezinski that aims to ensure the geopolitical destabilization of Russia and China, and prevent the economic integration of Eurasia through the Belt and Road Initiative, by using the old instruments of terrorism, opium wars, and ethnic conflicts.

Should this policy “succeed,” it would be just one more element in the great final act of mankind’s tragedy that is now playing out on the stage of world history between the adversaries of the West, and Russia and China. And that has now reached a point described by the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists as 100-seconds before midnight on the Doomsday Clock.

Operation Ibn Sina

There is a counter-concept for saving Afghanistan, which I have named “Operation Ibn Sina.”

Ibn Sina, who lived some 1,000 years ago, was one of the greatest physicians of universal history whose Canon of Medicine remained, in part, a reference until the 18th Century. Ibn Sina was born in what is now Uzbekistan. His father came from Balkh in Afghanistan. In this time of the corona pandemic, it is extremely important to remember that Ibn Sina was the one who recognized, among other things, the immense importance of quarantine in combating epidemics. In addition to being an outstanding Renaissance man, he can become a symbolic figure for saving Afghanistan.

Operation Ibn Sina can bring about a change for the better in two ways:

First, it can become a synonym for international cooperation in building a modern healthcare system and providing food for the Afghan people. If all the neighboring countries, as well as the United States and the European nations which fought in Afghanistan for 20 years as part of NATO and therefore have a moral obligation that cries out to Heaven, help the people out of this undeserved acute distress and cooperate in a crash aid program, the worst can still be averted.

In addition to the humanitarian aspect, Operation Ibn Sina also has a military-strategic dimension. If Russia, China, the U.S., and India—the four nations with the greatest military and economic importance or size of population—were to cooperate, this could become a confidence-building measure for resolving the major strategic conflicts....

Overcoming Depraved Indifference

There is no place on this Earth—and that includes the strategically explosive potential of destabilization operations around

Helga Zepp-LaRouche, chairwoman and founder of the Schiller Institute.

Ukraine and Taiwan—where the moral fitness to survive of the human species is more tested than in Afghanistan. It is not our security that we need to defend in the Hindu Kush... but it is our humanity.

Military strategists are invited to take into account what might be an unfamiliar domain of strategic thinking: The moral condition of the population—both their own population and their adversary’s. When the French Revolution failed due to the Jacobin terror, Friedrich Schiller found that “a great moment had found a small people.” Although the objective opportunity existed, the subjective moral capacity was lacking. He then wrote his Aesthetic Letters [published as the Letters Upon the Aesthetic Education of Man] with the conviction that from now on, any improvement in the political sphere would only be possible through the ennoblement of the character of the individual. He considered that the education of the capacity of the Empfindungsvermögen, of empathy, is the most pressing need of the times, because it “awakens the improvement in understanding.

From this perspective, overcoming the depraved indifference in parts of the population, which makes them equally insensitive to the suffering of other peoples, and to the effects of their geopolitically motivated demonization of the supposed enemy, is a strategic factor of the highest order. Operation Ibn Sina should, therefore, become the flag under which all forces unite, who want to save the Afghan people, out of agapē, who want to bring about a new paradigm in strategic relations as the means of finally overcoming the threat of war, and who want to defend the humanity of our species.

Sare Campaign Rallies Troops for Petition Drive

Special to New Federalist
NEW YORK, Feb. 13—On Sunday Feb. 6, the Sare for Senate campaign hosted a statewide Zoom meeting for activists who intend to gather the currently required 45,000 valid signatures to place LaRouche Independent candidate Diane Sare’s name on the New York State ballot. 77 people participated in what was the first of several such meetings which will take place around the State. From their greetings in the chat box, the following areas were among those represented: Buffalo, Brooklyn, Manhattan, Bronx, Long Island, Staten Island, Queens, and Rochester, as well as Orange and Broome Counties.

Sare and New York Schiller Institute leader Dennis Speed gave opening remarks, after which the candidate gave a slide show presentation on the petition requirements, including the changes in New York State law pertaining to ballot access, and the extremely partisan redistricting maps.

The Battle vs. Wall Street
Sare also gave a strategic briefing that highlighted the very real danger of a thermonuclear confrontation over efforts by NATO and assets in the U.S., including in the State Department, to provoke a Russian invasion of the Ukraine. She explained that now, more than ever, a new and independent voice must arise to clarify the reasons for opposition to this drive for war, for which Sare’s opponent, Chuck Schumer, the Senator from Wall Street, is a mouthpiece. It is critical, Sare stated, that she gain ballot status and defeat efforts by the corrupt party apparatus to silence her and other independent candidates. She is the only candidate who has expressed a willingness to fight Wall Street, the Wall Street that will impose savage austerity measures in an effort to shift the burden of what is now an unpreventable collapse of the trans-Atlantic monetarist financial system onto the majority of the American people.

Her remarks provoked a lively discussion, in which she made clear that her goal is not some moral victory, but to change the course of policy in this country and to mobilize for the kinds of systemic changes demanded by her mentor, the late statesman and economist Lyndon LaRouche, as the only pathway out of the current crisis.

Legislation Supported
Activists are mobilizing to get support for Assemblyman John Salka’s bill A08636 which would revert the signature requirement to the original 15,000 and extend the time allotted for gathering signatures, as well as restoring ballot status to the parties that were thrown off by the new laws (see article, this page).
Sare estimates that 500 volunteers will be needed for this effort—which is not merely to place her name on the ballot, but is part of a broader fight to restore the principle of representative government through the electoral process, which principle is currently in jeopardy in the United States (see editorial, page 1). The campaign is holding a series of Zoom meetings to recruit people to Sare’s “New York Freedom Spring” campaign and prepare them for this task. ## Dejean Strikes Independent Path in Texas

by Charles Notley
HOUSTON, Feb. 14—Since filing his candidacy on Dec. 1 to run for U.S. Congress as a LaRouche Independent from Texas’s newly-created 38th C.D., Joel Dejean has produced six short video messages outlining the nature of the multiple crises facing the nation and the world and the solutions provided by Lyndon LaRouche.

In one, he takes a unique tack on the hot-button issue of the “right to life”: “The first right is the right to life. If you are not alive, education is not going to go very far. We have to really go against the phony Christians in the United States, who claim to be Christians, while allowing an entire nation [Afghanistan] to be starved to death. We have to tell any fool in Ukraine who thinks that NATO is going to save them, “Just look at what’s going on in Afghanistan. That’s what NATO brings to your country: starvation, death, lack of sovereignty.”
Campaigning in what is largely a cluster of bedroom communities, Dejean has had to be creative in reaching voters: for example, speaking to parents picking up their children at elementary schools, and to students at two campuses of a local community college, where well over fifty people left their names and phone numbers, or emails, and several hundred campaign push cards were gotten out to the students, faculty, and visitors. One 20-something was so excited about Dejean’s unique message, that he joined the candidate and his team that same evening on a walking tour of downtown Tomball, engaging with many local shopkeepers and their customers.

Fighting to Save Lives
On Jan. 25, Dejean made a video in front of the Texas Medical Center in Houston, where he stated that “this medical center should be the model for the world. This complex was built up after World War II with the passage of the... Hill-Burton Act. [But] even with this great medical complex, we are losing more people in 2 and half days than China has lost in the first 2 years of the Covid-19 pandemic...” He called for the building of a new national and global health security system.
Dejean has testified multiple times before the Houston City Council, and more recently participated in the local Martin Luther King, Jr. parade and the Chinese New Years’ festival.
Because he is not running under the umbrella of a major party, for his name to appear on the ballot Dejean must gather at least 500 valid petition signatures between May 24 and June 23 from registered voters in the 38th CD who do not vote in either the primary or runoff elections.

A Former New Yorker
Born in Port au Prince, Haiti, Dejean moved with his family to the U.S., settling in the Bronx, where Joel’s aptitude in mathematics and physics earned him admission to the Bronx High School of Science. After high school, he attended SUNY at Stony Brook, graduating with a BS in Electrical Engineering.
Diane Sare, LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate from New York, has enthusiastically endorsed the candidacy of the former New Yorker, Dejean.

Sare Symposium: US-China Special Relationship

Special to New Federalist
NEW YORK, Feb. 15—LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate Diane Sare held a symposium Feb. 4 on the unfortunately little known “Historic U.S.-China Special Relationship,” in celebration of the Chinese lunar New Year, ushering in the Year of the Tiger. Featured speakers were the widely published American business and trade expert, Dr. George Koo, and historian Robert Wesser. Commentary was provided by Leni Rubinstein, editor-in-chief of the Chinese language edition of Executive Intelligence Review, and Richard A. Black, representative of the Schiller Institute at the UN.
Sare opened the discussion by making the sharp point that normal and healthy relations between great nations are based on finding the pathways of mutual benefit. The successes of one nation should not be seen as a threat to the other, but rather as a new opportunity for collaboration, which was the case between the US and China; the long history of China-US collaboration dates from even before the great defeat of the British Empire in the American Revolutionary War. Sare, a longtime associate of the late American statesman and economist Lyndon LaRouche is continuing his legacy of friendship and collaboration with the Chinese-American community.
Legalize the Marriage!
Speaking at a prestigious Los Angeles conference in 2007 titled, “Forum on U.S.-China Relationship and Peaceful Reunification of China,” LaRouche referred to the fact, unknown to most Americans today, that China and the United States have supported one another economically, politically, and culturally, throughout U.S. history. “The great asset the United States has is China,” he said in discussing the then-emerging global financial crisis, “because China has become the leading trade partner for the United States, and the ability to maintain the economy of China is to get the economy of the U.S. to fix its [currency exchange] value, and to get back to increasing exports to China... Therefore, these two nations need each other. They are prisoners locked in a marriage that cannot be broken. And they have to legalize the marriage!”

Dr. George Koo delivered a three part presentation. First, he reviewed the tremendous dimensions of China-US trade, beginning early in the administration of President Washington. He also compared the areas of difference in outlook between the two cultures, and lastly, he powerfully concluded with that precise proposition which Mr. LaRouche had made many years earlier: the world needs the US and China to work together.
Mutual Admiration
Historian Robert Wesser gave a presentation titled, “The China-US Partnership: Historic ‘Win-Win’ Allies vs. Empire.” He presented a sweep of American history in which America’s patriot leaders—Dr. Benjamin Franklin, George Washington, John Quincy Adams and Abraham Lincoln and their circles—steered American policy to contribute the newly-created “American System” of discoveries and inventions to great countries such as China and Russia, and to bring to America the best of those other cultures, such as the extensive writings on questions of virtue and morality of the Chinese philosopher and political organizer, Confucius.

Listeners were fascinated to learn that some of the greatest leaders and scholars of China in the nineteenth century—in their fight both against the British Empire and to establish the Republic of China in 1911—publicly proclaimed that their heroes and role models were George Washington and Abraham Lincoln!
The presentations were followed by a lively exchange on topics ranging from the immense changes going on in China today, to questions about the current dangerous war provocations coming from NATO for a war against China. Koo joked that US Secretary of State Antony Blinken has recently been traveling around the world demonizing China and Russia, but doesn’t realize that he’s wearing a hospital gown, with his backside hanging out!

Will Pandemics, Death Become the New Normal?

people must learn to live with the virus, including its sometimes-deadly consequences, as they do the flu. He argues that the number of infections coupled with the approximate 70% vaccination rate, (which is higher in many urban areas like New York City), have already created what amounts to “herd immunity,” which justifies ending such things as mask mandates and social distancing, as well as contact tracing of those infected.
Emanuel, notorious for his advocacy of Obamacare’s so-called “death panels” (which denied certain expensive healthcare to the elderly and chronically ill), and who is also an advisor to the Biden Administration on health policy, had also urged that the CDC cease its daily and monthly reports on Covid deaths, and instead lump them in with reports of deaths from the flu and similar viral diseases. The CDC adopted this policy last month. The morally insane Emanuel also opposes keeping elderly people alive beyond age 65, claiming that they contribute little to society and use up scarce resources. In 2014 he wrote in The Atlantic “...[age] 65 will be my last colonoscopy. No screening for prostate cancer at any age... After 75, if I develop cancer, I will refuse treatment. Similarly, no cardiac stress test. No pacemaker and certainly no implantable defibrillator. No heart-valve replacement or bypass surgery... No to antibiotics.”

Stop the Murderous Policy
Diane Sare, LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate in New York, claimed that the collapse of public health response to the virus is “a policy of deliberate murder, especially in conditions of an onrushing global economic collapse (see article, page 1). People are fools if they think that disease can be confined to less developed nations. As we have seen, impoverished areas in Africa and Asia serve as a petri dish which breed deadly mutations which then spread around the world.”
She reported that “Places like the Bronx in New York City also provide a similar effect. As you read this there are new variants reportedly brewing in our sewage.” Sare was referring to a recent article in the magazine Nature which reported that New York City wastewater shows “viral fragments with mutations that had never been reported before in human patients.” Called “cryptic lineages,” they are suspected to be from people whose infections aren’t being tested or sequenced. Rats are also suspected. “These lineages contain mutations that had been rarely observed in clinical samples,” the article’s extract reports, “including Q493K, Q498Y, E484A, and T572N and share many mutations with the Omicron variant of concern... including the possibility that these lineages are derived from unsampled human COVID-19 infections or that they indicate the presence of a non-human animal reservoir.” Separately, while there are many reports of the sampling of deer in the NYC area, rats are definitely indicated.

“EZ-kill” Emanuel is really a Nuremberg Criminal,” said Sare. “His ravings should be ignored and he should be publicly denounced for advocating the Nazi “useless eater” philosophy, for which people were hanged at Nuremberg. What is required is to create an international public health platform to share data on new diseases and collaborate to eliminate the conditions of poverty which create fertile conditions for new and old diseases. We must never allow pandemics and death to become the new normal.”

Sare Rally Demands Release of Seized Afghan Funds

On Feb. 10, LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate Diane Sare held a rally on the corner of Third Ave and 65th Street in Manhattan to demand that the Biden Administration release the $9.5 billion of Afghan Central Bank money, which has been frozen by the New York Federal Reserve. Sare announced, “I am here to interrupt your day to let you know that one million children are near death due to starvation, and millions more are going to die if this money is not released.” Passers-by were largely unaware of the dire situation and horrified to learn of it. The rally was joined by an Afghan-American whose foundation raises funds to build wells in Afghanistan, but thanks to the U.S. sanctions is permitted to send only $200 of this money per day. Watch Sare’s Facebook Live video at bit.ly/3LF9NHQ.

Since the rally, President Joe Biden decided to split the $7B held by the New York Federal Reserve between the 9/11 Families and Afghan relief, but as of now it is unknown how these funds will actually be used to address the crisis. Afghan representatives and activists who are trying to avert mass death decried this move as “theft,” pointing out that it is the Saudi government, found by U.S. investigators to be involved in funding and coordinating the 9/11 attack, that should be paying the 9/11 victims, as their lawsuit demands. They condemned this diversion of Afghan money, because it is taking it from starving people, most of whom were not even born when 9/11 occurred.
