Only New Security System Can Prevent World War III

Special to New Federalist
NEW YORK, Mar. 18—It has begun to dawn on the gullible, unsuspecting, (or simply perplexed) citizens of the United States and Europe that the “sudden and unforeseen” conflict in Ukraine is a prelude to something far more ominous, as the price of gas and food soar to new unaffordable heights, while insane and irresponsible politicians call for nuclear war, either outright, as in the case of Sen. Roger Wicker, (R-MS), or by imposing a “no fly zone” over Ukraine, which will lead to all out war against Russia.

Sinister Ends
France’s Finance Minister, Bruno Le Maire, spilled the beans in a February interview when he referred to the economic sanctions against Russia as “financial nuclear war” and followed that up by insisting “the Russian people will also pay the consequences. Let’s be clear—we want to target the heart of the Russian system. We target Vladimir Putin, we target the oligarchs, but we also target the entire Russian economy.” He was only forced to retract his words when former Russian president Dmitri Medvedev warned him to watch his language, and not to forget that “economic wars in the history of humanity often were transformed into ‘real wars’”.

The fact that this result is intended for the rest of us is not hidden, although U.S. Deputy Treasury Secretary Wally Adeyemo assured MSNBC’s White House correspondent Kayla Tausche,

“We know that the American people and our allies are willing to pay a cost to defend freedom.”

However, there is some anxiety being expressed in financial circles. A March 16 opinion piece in the Financial Times by Patrick Jensens says, “there is some recognition that there will be blowback for the rest of the world—higher petrol prices, for example, and further inflation in domestic energy costs. But I am not sure the potential impact for the world outside Russia has been fully acknowledged... [O]ther financial and economic consequences certainly stretch far beyond the petrol pump. The spiraling cost of wheat, grain, nickel, and a host of other commodities is threatening the affordability of everything from daily bread to climate disaster mitigation.”

Russian President Vladimir Putin accurately summed up the situation on March 16th: “I want ordinary Western people to hear me, too. You are persistently told that your current difficulties are the result of Russia’s hostile actions and that you have to pay for the efforts to counter the alleged Russian threat from your own pockets. All of that is a lie.

As Inflation Soars:

NEW YORK, March 16—The average price of regular gas around the country is now well over $4.00/gallon. It is even higher in the New York metropolitan area and headed higher still. Some expect that gas prices will be over $6.00/gallon by the start of the normally busy summer driving season.

A gas station manager, besieged by angry customers demanding to know why prices are being hiked daily, revealed that had been sent a crib sheet from his distributor telling him that he should blame the increases “on Putin’s savage war in the Ukraine” and the sanctions against Russia imposed by the Biden Administration, which last week included the imposition of a ban on Russian petroleum imports. “They sent this to me a week before the ban,” he said. “It makes no sense.”

Hyperinflation
The hyperinflation that has gripped not only gasoline prices but other essential commodities such as precious metals and especially food, where the devastating increase in fertilizer prices threatens serious reductions in food output in the U.S. and western economies, has little or nothing to do with Russia or Russian imports.

their own self-serving interests and super profits...

Sare Endorses Appeal for New Security, Development Paradigm

by Diane Sare
On March 11, the Schiller Institute publicly released the names of over 125 prominent individuals who have endorsed its call to “Convoke an International Conference to Establish a New Security and Development Architecture for All Nations.” I am proud to be on that list (see p.4), which includes scientists, military figures, intelligence analysts, diplomats and others from all over the world, because without such a conference, mankind will not be able to escape the current trajectory toward doom—either through thermonuclear war or physical economic collapse.

Even if the so-called “Ukraine crisis” is resolved through a negotiated settlement that addresses Russia’s legitimate security concerns as well as those of Ukraine, the march toward thermonuclear war between superpowers will not be stopped, because the expressed intent of the Biden Administration and NATO is the total economic destruction of both Russia and China, and any other nation which threatens to become economically independent and scientifically advanced.

At a Jan. 25 White House press briefing, unnamed “senior administration officials” said that the goal was to “destroy Russia’s aspirations” to industrialize and diversify its economy by targeting all scientific advancements. The “Innovation and Competition Act” introduced by my opponent “Killer” Chuck Schumer, which passed in the U.S. Senate last year, is explicitly designed to “stop China” in the same way.

As Helga Zepp-LaRouche warned already in 2014, as China’s Belt and Road Initiative was growing with dozens of nations joining in the largest infrastructure building endeavor ever in human history, “You can’t stop 1.4 billion people, unless you are prepared for a major war.”

This policy of trying to crush other nations while also destroying ourselves is insane and evil, and has nothing to do with the founding principles of the American Republic. We fought and won the American Revolution precisely to liberate the people of the world from the British imperialism that has killed tens of millions of people through war, famine and disease.

Therefore, I think the idea of convening a conference to establish a new order of peace and security through economic development, with each nation being treated with equal respect, would fulfill the expressed intent of our Declaration of Independence, that “all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights...” These rights cannot be realized without a new economic system, one that is not based on the delusional fantasies of the billionaires of the “Great Reset,” but is based on the sound principles put forward by the brilliant economist Lyndon LaRouche in his “Four Laws,” which he described in 2014 as “not an option, but an urgent necessity.” We are already very late in acting to save ourselves and the world, but hopefully not too late.

Sare Addresses 200 at Brooklyn Mosque

LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate Diane Sare speaks to congregants at a mosque in Brooklyn on March 4. Her comments, particularly about the Schiller Institute’s Project Ibn Sina—to build a modern health care system in Afghanistan—were well received, and several people favorably recalled the work of the late economist and political leader Lyndon LaRouche and his campaigns for the presidency. Everyone took copies of the New Federalist after her remarks.

NEW YORK March 16—Close to 300 New Yorkers have volunteered to gather signatures to place LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate Diane Sare’s name on the ballot for the Nov. 8 midterm election. The campaign is actively recruiting more volunteers to help in this drive to surpass the outrageous requirement of 45,000 valid signatures of registered New York voters, to be collected over a six week period beginning on April 19. This onerous, intended-to-be-impossible requirement was quietly slipped into the 2020-21 New York State budget, behind the backs of the New York voters. It also eliminated the Libertarian, Green and Serve America Parties from the ballot.

DIANE SARE Independent Candidate for U.S. Senate

As New Variant Surges in Europe, Asia

Sare: U.S. Has No Policy To Fight Covid 19

NEW YORK, March 17—As a new Omicron variant surges in Europe and Asia, including in China, LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate from New York Diane Sare charged that the Biden Administration has no strategy to deal effectively with the now more than 2-year old pandemic that has claimed nearly 1 million U.S. lives and at least six million lives world-wide.

A recent study from The Lancet finds that there were 18 million “excess deaths” worldwide over the last two years, which its writers attribute to the virus. Sare believes these deaths can be attributed either to infection, or the socio-economic effects of handling it in such an uncoordinated and arbitrary manner, and failure to face the dilapidated state of the western nation’s economies. The lack of hospital beds and the breakdown of food supply chains, increased the death toll, not to mention deaths due to drug overdose and despair exacerbated by the psychological hardship of increased isolation.

The World Health Organization says that the pandemic appears far from over, as even on a “down” week last week, there were more than 11 million new infections, world-wide.

After weeks of declines in new cases, hospitalizations, and death, those figures are rising again, including in Great Britain, where efforts to contain the spread have been all but abandoned. The consensus among the experts is that these trends will be reflected in the U.S within the next several weeks, even as the country, following guidance from the CDC, has been returning to “normal,” in public places and schools. Officials report that they are already seeing rises in new cases, including this week in

New York, Florida, and especially California. The CDC knows this, and even admits it, reporting that they have picked up new strains of the mutated virus in urban and suburban wastewater, including in New York City and Long Island.

EZ-Kill’s Murder Program

The same officials who okayed the rollback of unpopular and restrictive practices have also admitted that it is far too early to tell whether the new Omicron variant BA.2 produces less or more severe outcomes than its predecessor.

Sare charged that the Administration and public health officials have effectively adopted the insane recommendation of former Obama health advisor Ezekiel “EZ-kill” Emanuel, who in recent published articles said that we must now “learn to live with the virus,” notwithstanding the millions of deaths so far, and rely on what is called “herd immunity” as our principal defense. He recommends that this be both US and global policy, saying it is useless and costly to try to prevent deaths, especially of elderly people.

“If we listen to “EZ-kill”, we could be talking about sending millions more people worldwide to their deaths,” Sare charged, “and tens of thousands in this country. This is deliberate genocide. we are making preventable death the new normal.”

Fight the Virus

Instead, Sare said that “we need to maintain our fighting capacity and defeat this virus, both here and globally. We need to establish a modern health system in every nation and cooperate on research on new strains of viruses to prevent pandemics. We need a vaccine that works to stop the spread,” said Sare, “one that is easy to administer, store, and distribute worldwide, and that does not require everyone in the world to get vaccinated multiple times. I’m sure the American people would be very interested to know how much money we have

Musk: Open Europe Nuke Plants; Why Not Build at Indian Point?

Special to New Federalist

NEW YORK, March 17—Billionaire entrepreneur Elon Musk said last week that, in the face of the energy crisis being blamed on Russia’s allegedly “unprovoked” action in Ukraine and related sanctions, that European nations like Germany should reopen closed nuclear facilities to meet demands for power.

His comments produced an immediate firestorm of protests from freaked-out greens, who raised fears of impending nuclear disasters spreading radiation throughout the planet. The ever-flamboyant Musk responded by saying the fears of radiation leaks were unfounded and their potential impacts overblown. He challenged ergy source from that location into the regional grid. It appears that the most efficient thing to do in order to restore adequate energy for New York City and State would likely be to build several small modular reactors at the Indian Point location. The candidate is currently investigating the feasibility of doing this.

Sare contrasted her scientifically sound proposals to the recent lunacy proposed by newly elected Mayor Eric Adams, who earlier this month said that the City will commit $200 million to build an offshore wind farm hub at the South Brooklyn Marine Terminal in partnership with Norway’s Equinor Corporation multi-billion-dollar Empire Wind and Beacon Wind his critics to identify a place which they believed had the worst radiation problem, and that he would go there and eat food produced in the area, as he had done following the 2015 Fukushima nuclear disaster.

Diane Sare, LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate in New York, welcomed Musk’s suggestion but said he needs to go further. “I would urge him to support reopening nuclear plants in this country, including building new reactors at the recently dismantled Indian Point plant in Buchanan, New York,” said Sare. “Taking its third reactor off line has left the region prone to serious, and perhaps potentially murderous, power shortages—especially in New York City—as we enter the summer months.”

Use Indian Point Site

Sare reported that, while the decommissioning of the reactors at Indian Point is too far along to allow for them to be put back on line, new reactors could be built on the same site. One important reason this could work is that the transmission lines remain intact, making it much less costly in both time and money to bring a new en-offshore wind project. Sare called this proposal, which would eventually cost $3-4 billion “an expensive waste of time” and demanded that such funding be diverted for use in building a new reactor, or reactors, at Indian Point.

“Last year I organized efforts to prevent the closing of the Indian Point Complex, which was providing 25% of New York City’s electricity, and warned of the consequences which would follow,” said Sare. “You will soon see those consequences, as plans to make up for some of the power lost by the closing were dealt a blow earlier this year, when the State denied operating licenses for two proposed gas-fueled plants. We have no power to make this up, and it is going to be a hot summer.”

Africa Needs Nukes

Going back to Musk’s proposal, Sare said that “he should broaden his call and ask that there be many safe modern reactors, including SMRs, built all over Africa. My late friend Phillip Tsokolibane fought long and hard for this, and it would be a fitting tribute to his memory to get this going (for related article, see page 3).”

whole have suffered a major blow, as did trust in the US dollar as the main reserve currency. The illegitimate freezing of some of the currency reserves of the Bank of Russia marks the end of the reliability of so-called first-class assets.... Now everybody knows that financial reserves can simply be stolen...”

Putin’s efforts to engage in real diplomacy, to secure legally-binding security guarantees for his nation, were rejected outright by the U.S. and NATO, who continue defiantly ignoring the fact that he has been asking for recognition of legitimate Russian concerns since his speech at the Munich Security Conference on February 12, 2007, not to mention since the 2014 U.S.-backed coup in Ukraine which led to an eight-year war in Eastern Ukraine resulting in 14,000 deaths, including hundreds of children, so far. A string of broken promises from western diplomats, beginning with the pledge made in 1990 that there would be no eastward expansion of NATO; the unwillingness to accept Putin’s demand that Ukraine should not be allowed to join NATO; the refusal to stop delivery of offensive weapons to Ukraine; the failure to insist that Ukraine must abide by the provisions of the Minsk Accords, which it signed; and the rejection of the demand to crack down on violent, neo-Nazi militia embedded in Ukraine’s defense and security forces—left Putin, from his standpoint, with no choice except to act as he did.

An Alternative System

What Western leaders now do not even dare to whisper about, (as one never mentions “rope in the house of the hanged”) is that nuclear superpowers Russia and China as well as other nations in their orbit, have no intention of being reduced to immiserated “banana republics,” controlled by London, Wall Street and the U.S. State Department. This should have already been obvious when these nations rejected the Malthusian demands of Prince Charles at the failed COP-26 conference held late last year in Glasgow.

Unbeknownst to most Americans, and certainly not reported by Western press, a video conference took place March 11, with participants from the Eurasian Economic Union (EAEU) and China, on a project for an independent international monetary and financial system, involving a new currency and other features. This was agreed upon by the participants in the economic dialogue “New Stage of Monetary, Financial and Economic Cooperation between the Eurasian Economic Union and the People’s Republic of China. Global Transformations: Challenges and Solutions.” The Kapital.kz business information center reports that the Minister for Integration and Macroeconomics of the EAEU Sergei Glazyev, (a long time admirer of the brilliant late economist and statesman Lyndon LaRouche) said, “Given the common challenges and risks associated with the global economic slowdown and restrictive measures against the EAEU states and China, our countries should intensify practical cooperation both at the level of regular expert dialogues and in the area of joint measures and projects.” As a foretaste of things to come, Saudi Arabia seems to be moving toward accepting payments for petroleum in Chinese Yuan.

Showdown

The burning question faced by mankind is whether the currently bankrupt self-declared ruling elites will resort to nuclear war to prevent the majority of the world’s population from leaving their stinking, sinking ship and creating a new system which allows their people to prosper.

It’s worth reviewing the distribution of some of the world’s important resources in order to understand why the US/UK/NATO axis stands to fare much worse from their own sanctions regime than the nations they intend to destroy.

Using figures from 2020, Russia, China and India combined, had a population of 2.9 billion, or 38% of the world’s people. Among them, they produce 43% of the world’s wheat, 65% of the world’s coal, and 66% of the world’s steel. Of 42 of the most important minerals and related products, Russia, China, and Kazakhstan account for more than 70% of 16 of them, including graphite, tungsten, bismuth and mercury.

Knowing this, the sanctions regime being promoted by the Biden Administration under control of Global Britain’s Prince Charles, is akin to the bank robber who rushes up to the teller, points his gun at his own head and says, hand over all your cash, or I’ll shoot. The problem in this case is that the bank robber also has nuclear weapons.

LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Senate Diane Sare stressed that the world is in an existential crisis, and that the only way out is along the lines of the appeal released by the Schiller Institute to “Convoke an International Conference to Establish a New Security and Development Architecture for All Nations” which she endorsed and which appears in this paper.

Sare: Race Against Time

Sare said, “We are in a race against time to get the people of given the pharmaceutical industry to produce vaccines of limited usefulness. I am glad to hear that Pfizer now says it will work to develop a vaccine that will work on all variants and require only one dose, but officials have to realize that Americans are tired of being treated like cash cows by the pharmaceutical industry, which often appears to be more interested in making a profit than curing disease.

“Each nation must have adequate personnel and hospital infrastructure to deal with this and other pandemic diseases that may be coming around the corner. Equally importantly, we need to strengthen the baseline health of our people, which requires addressing housing, sanitation, nutrition and mental health. It should not surprise anyone to discover that the hardest hit parts of the nation were also the most impoverished. The center of the spread of Covid-19 in this country was the Bronx, where thousands of people live in overcrowded apartments without adequate heat and ventilation. Vaccines and medicine alone cannot fight disease.”

may have signed for any other U.S. Senate candidate. Also, at least 500 valid signatures must be secured from each of half of the state’s 26 congressional districts. No one has ever done this before.

Fight in the NYS Assembly

In recent days, a buzz has been detected in the New York State assembly over efforts waged by a coalition of disenfranchised voters, candidates (including Sare) and the Libertarian and Green parties. A bill, A08683 was introduced late last year to reverse the new exclusionary requirements for ballot access and co-sponsors are signing on. There seems to be fear in some quarters that New Yorkers will recognize the blatant theft involved—as one old New York Democrat put it, “They threw all their opposition off the ballot in order to cancel the election and steal $100 million!”—an accurate assessment, as far as it goes.

Worse than the mere stealing of votes and money is the effect of silencing all debate as the United States careens toward war with the major nuclear superpowers of Russia and China, while its citizens are being bled to death with soaring hyperinflation. Since the leaders of both major parties believe they stand to profit handsomely from the insane policies causing the crisis, they certainly aren’t going to do anything to change course.

In a very real sense, the fight to place Sare’s name on the ballot is really a fight to save representative government in the state and in the nation. If incumbent politicians can keep everyone who represents an alternative view off the ballot—by making it impossible for them to qualify—it exposes the lie of their alleged concern about the “right to vote.” Of course, everyone, and their dead ancestors, and cats and dogs can be allowed to vote, under new voting rules, if no outsiders are allowed to be on the ballot.

If you’d like to help crush this creeping drive to dictatorship, call the Sare campaign office at 646-328-1932, or sign up at sareforsenate.com. The petitioning drive will begin on April 19. Join the fight now.

The War in Your Pocket, 24 Hours

What do you really know about the war in the Ukraine? You might have a sense that you know almost everything, as it is all there for you, 24 hours a day, on the various interlocked feeds coming from media and social media sources on the computer screen in your pocket, your “smart” phone.

This is the first war in the mass smartphone era, with smartphones now being the main source of people’s news. But where is that news coming from? In some cases, it’s the same mass media flying across your video screens on your HD-TV or your computer screen.

It comes from on-line press, which overlap the various cable and streaming services, and it also comes from various bloggers, who may be picking up video feeds from various individuals, who are themselves placing what they see into video transmitted via the net, potentially reaching millions, through such social media platforms as Twitter and Facebook. Google and similar compilers also send you “breaking stories,” apparently according to your profile, but also according to what the people who run such platforms, including YouTube, want you to see.

What is being described here is the most elaborate, most complete brainwashing capability in history, now mobilized for warfare on the flaccid minds of the world population. Nearly 80 years ago, in 1944, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill, contemplating the decline of British naval and military power in the face of the emergence of the vast military power of the United States and the then-Soviet Union, realized that British imperial control of the world needed to come from a different source. The next empires, as he told a Harvard University audience, will be “empires of the mind.” What he meant by this was explained in a groundbreaking series of articles by L. Wolfe published by the LaRouche movement in the 1990s, published together in the pamphlet, “Turn Off Your TV,” which has circulated to millions in print and through the internet (bit.ly/36xM38D). The British had become masters of psychological warfare, using the London-based Tavistock Insti-

Winston Churchill saw the need to create “an empire of the mind.” tute as their center of operations. Using a Freudian paradigm, they were able to show that brainwashing techniques involving the use of fear to break down personalities, making them more infantile and susceptible to control and manipulation, could be applied to large targeted populations en masse. The concepts of tension and release induced through mass shock, could be used to gain acceptance for controls and limitations on personal rights and freedoms which individuals and societies would never yield otherwise.

Mass Brainwashing

Technology gave these brainwashers for the new “Empire of the Mind” easy access to larger segments of the population. Movies with larger than life images were such a technology. Radio could produce the same effects. But it wasn’t until the mass penetration of television that they had the ideal tool for brainwashing. Once the technology spread worldwide, with the use of satellites, a simultaneous series of images and voice could be sent instantaneously around the world. Think for a moment back to 9/11. As images of the planes hitting the Twin Towers were being broadcast around the world, the image of Osama bin Laden appeared on the screen, thus identifying the person responsible for this terrifying slaughter, and Americans were recruited to a senseless series of wars against Islamic populations who were completely unrelated to the 9/11 attacks.

The late Lyndon LaRouche, who knew how the mass brainwashing would work, on a radio show in Salt Lake City on the morning of 9/11 warned his listeners that this would be pinned on bin Laden, when the real culprits lay with the U.S. military intelligence establishment. What was called terrorism was not some independent non-state entity, but something tightly controlled and used by intelligence services. To this day, the real planners of the 9/11 conspiracy have yet to be exposed.

The further development of the internet since 9/11 has enhanced the ability of these mass brainwashers to apply their techniques. As Wolfe explained, social shocks like 9/11 produce trauma that causes people to be more easily manipulated as they seek explanations for their plight. The leading Tavistock brainwashing experts Eric Trist and Fred Emery hypothesized that such shocks would leave people so stressed out that they could be induced to accept a totally fabricated pseudo-reality. With that in mind, reflect on how the shocks and stress of the pandemic have created a population highly susceptible to the propaganda around the current war in the Ukraine.

Some Examples

Let’s look at a couple of examples to see how this works. Russian President Putin has stated that there are actual Nazi formations in Ukraine that operate against ethnic Russian populations, typified by the Azov Battalion of the national guard, and that the Ukrainian government is too weak to do anything about it. This is ridiculed by the media and denied by the images coming across the web. Several video reports have appeared on your smartphone featuring members of the Azov Battalion, who are presented as courageous Ukrainian freedom fighters. In one such interview, a Colonel in the Azov Battalion points to three dead bodies on the ground, and the camera then shows the corpse of a blonde, blue-eyed girl, the Colonel saying, “these are the victims of Putin’s savage thugs”. But - if you look closely at his outstretched arm, you can see the Colonel’s swastika armband, which had been turned away from the camera. Many Ukrainians have reported that members of this Nazi force routinely stage such photo ops, bringing bodies and laying them out. What the media never reports is that in 2013-14, the Obama-Biden State Department sponsored a coup that overthrew the elected government of Ukraine, replacing it with a puppet regime which was upheld by the fascist groupings. On May 2, 2014, the Azov Battalion trapped hundreds of union leaders and their families in a union headquarters building, then set it on fire. As people tried to escape the fire by jumping out of windows, they were shot. At least 52 people died inside the building.

Take last week’s report on your phone showing fires at Ukrainian nuclear reactor sites, with captions stating that the Russians were shelling the facility, leading to fear of nuclear explosion. The fires were real but the story was not. In reality Russian troops were rushing to take over the facilities because the Ukrainian Nazis planned to blow them up. The Nazi brigades were setting the fires, as a way to try to force NATO to enter the conflict.

Inoculation

Who is crafting this brainwashing? The media is fully complicit in spewing this war propaganda, which dismisses anything the Russians might say (and which they do not generally report) as lies. But there are also others who are putting videos out to reinforce the “party line” on the war. The lies come through blogs and podcasts, and also find their way to the main sewer line of CNN, MSNBC, Sky News, etc.

It is likely that the control center for the entire brainwashing operation is a unit operating out of the GCHQ, the British version of the National Security Agency, and its special operations unit JTRIG, the Joint Threat Research Intelligence Group, an apparatus exposed by the journalist Glenn Greenwald in 2014, using materials provided by whistleblower Edward Snowden. Greenwald cited a classified powerpoint presentation to a secret conference in 2012 on “The Art of Deception—Training for a New Generation of Online Covert Operations.” The unidentified presenter brags that he can make anyone believe anything, and uses a slick presentation of images and messaging to argue that the smartphone makes the whole world a target for such manipulations. We will present more on these methods in future articles. But for now, let us say that you need to turn off your cell phone at times so that you might turn on your mind.

Just as Lyndon LaRouche calmly cut through the post-9/11 hysteria to lay out the causes behind the events, Diane Sare’s Independent campaign for U.S. Senate is an urgently necessary vehicle for inoculating today’s citizens against the massive psychological warfare. So turn off your phones at least some of the time, and watch these pages for further news.

IN LOVING MEMORY

Ramasimong Phillip Tsokolibane, 1959–2022

Leader of LaRouche South Africa

The following is an obituary for my great friend Phillip Tsokolibane, the brave leader of the LaRouche South Africa movement, who passed away earlier this month. I participated in many conferences with him, where his presence and bearing made the participants aware of their responsibility to help the people of Africa attain their economic independence and liberation from poverty. This was never presented as if begging for assistance, but as something that must be done for the benefit of everyone. He was fearless in the identification of the Malthusians who stood in the way of Africa’s development, whether they be South African politicians or former U.S. President Barack Obama, who bragged of his African heritage. We carry on Phillip’s passionate struggle for a Just New World Economic Order, whose vision he shared with Lyndon LaRouche. —Diane Sare

by David Cherry, P.D. Lawton
Ramasimong Phillip Tsokolibane, a collaborator of the late political leader and economist Lyndon LaRouche and leader of LaRouche South Africa, died on Wednesday, March 2 at his home in Evaton, Gauteng, South Africa.

More than a political activist, he was truly a thinker. As Ramasimong grew in his understanding of LaRouche’s mission, it expanded his comprehension of his own purpose and mission. Thus, while speaking as a proud citizen of South Africa, he also spoke for the people of all of Africa. He saw himself as absorbing their hopes and needs, their longing to live as fully productive human beings. In his many statements, including greetings to conferences sponsored by the Schiller Institute, he summoned his righteous anger in words for the enemies of that vision for Africa and the world.

Phillip was a great admirer and collaborator of “that great lady,” as he called her, Helga Zepp-LaRouche, and was proud to represent Africa on her Committee for the Coincidence of Opposites. One of his greatest desires was to bring Mrs. Zepp-LaRouche to Africa and to South Africa to meet the people she was fighting so hard to defend for a chance for a better life.

ganization—for his own website, LaRouche South Africa, and for Executive Intelligence Review, the world’s leading journal on the advance of human civilization.

His perception of events in South Africa broadened and elevated the thinking of those wanting to understand the nature and actions of the Malthusian forces that have kept the Republic of South Africa a captured vassal state of Wall Street and the City of London oligarchs.

Ramasimong thus sought to guide South African political thought to a higher level and said that what happens throughout the continent will be controlled by the Malthusian operations of the oligarchy until national sovereignty is achieved politically and financially.

It was through his work and that of David Cherry that the color revolution against former president Jacob Zuma was first exposed. His analysis has proved to be perfectly correct.

Ramasimong was a lifelong member of Mangaliso Robert Sobukwe’s Pan Africanist Congress (PAC). Sobukwe’s PAC, contrary to Anglo-American propaganda, was founded on the principle that, beyond all else, it is “agape,” love of mankind, that matters. It was that principle that drew him to the ideas of Lyndon LaRouche. He also defended President Jacob Zuma and the African National Congress from 2014.

He joined LaRouche South Africa in 1991—long before it had that name—a short time after it Broadcasting Corporation TV, one of the London tabloids, Iran’s Press TV, and others. One of the interviews was given by a member of LaRouche South Africa, Frank Sukwana. They called Obama “a killer.” The LaRouche South Africa demonstrators said that American foreign policy under Obama had killed more people in Iraq and Libya, and by drone warfare in Somalia, than Hitler had done.

A young man, standing on the sidelines of one of these interviews, afterwards said to Ramasimong, “Where are you from?” Ramasimong: “I am from here, from Evaton township,” just 50 kilometers away. The young man said, “No you’re not. Nobody around here talks like that!” It was emblematic of one of the problems of presenting LaRouche’s ideas to the broad public in South Africa.

Unlike President Obama, LaRouche South Africa consistently pushed for more nuclear energy as a way to provide inexpensive, reliable baseload energy to enable the industrialization of African economies. In one of the articles co-written with David Cherry, “South Africa: Nuclear Power or Bust!” (bit.ly/3igF4mW), they outlined the dire consequences should South Africa neglect nuclear technology. Ramasimong distributed a great deal of literature, both via email and by hand. One recipient was a man who lived near him, but who could not recognize the leadership of Lyndon LaRouche after several conversations. Eventually, Ramasimong circulated DVD copies of a LaRouche Town Hall event in New York City, at which Lyndon LaRouche’s friend, former Alaska U.S. Senator and Presidential candidate Mike Gravel, was present in person, and spoke and answered questions. Ramasimong’s neighbor was deeply touched by Sen. Gravel’s humanity and humility. It turned him around so powerfully, that when his wife bore him a son, he named him Lyndon.

In 2015, Ramasimong delivered a lecture at the Citizens Electoral Council conference in Melbourne, Australia, celebrating publication of the book-length proposal for a new economic paradigm, The New Silk Road Becomes the World Land-Bridge (Vol. I), jointly developed by the Executive Intelligence Review and the Schiller Institute, which promotes international cooperation and peace through the science of physical economy, starting with infrastructure for development corridors worldwide.

In his speech, Ramasimong referred to his own eventual passing and asked that he be remembered not for material possessions, but for the vision he will leave for others to take up, as they continue the universal fight for a better world. This speech is a powerful reminder of who Ramasimong Phillip Tsokolibane was. It is posted at bit.ly/36obwkF by the Australian Citizens Party.

Ramasimong will long be remembered. He leaves behind his wife, Mmateboho; a son, Leburu; a daughter, Thando; a granddaughter, Selina; a brother, Pusho; and many, many other family members, associates, friends, and admirers.

In the last statement he worked on—a greeting to the February 10 conference on the Afghan crisis co-sponsored by the Schiller Institute and the Russian International Affairs Council—he condemned the efforts of the international financial elite to impose a regime of death as “the new normal.” We publish it below.

Death must never become the new normal. Unnecessary death by disease or in warfare that can be prevented, can be defeated. The disciples of death must never be listened to, lest all of us pay the price for such immoral folly. Instead, I urge you to listen to the wise counsel of Helga LaRouche, who sees us as capable of so much more. Africa stands ready to fight for the future survival of the human race.

Thank you.

Death Must Never Become the New Normal!

Ramasimong Phillip Tsokolibane submitted this statement as a greeting to the Feb. 10, 2022 Schiller Institute conference on the Humanitarian Crisis in Afghanistan.

I am Ramasimong Phillip Tsokolibane. I am proud to lead the LaRouche movement in South Africa. I send greetings and the hope of all Africa for your fruitful and successful deliberations in this solemn conference.

That wonderful lady, Helga Zepp-LaRouche, the chairwoman of the Schiller Institute, has decied how the world has turned away from the crisis faced by the war-ravaged people of Afghanistan, where 8 million people face the brutality of death by starvation and countless more could succumb to this COVID pandemic. She has rightfully demanded emergency actions to avoid these results. Action even now by the great powers could stop this tragedy.

I would remind you that Helga last year joined me in demanding similar emergency actions to deal with an even greater crisis on the continent of Africa, where disease and famine do not threaten, but are already killing millions. Nothing was done. And people are dying. Yet we hear from leaders in my country, who have all but given up on fighting the virus, that we must learn to live with it. Even as the bodies still pile up in the townships waiting for cremation, we are told that this is the best we can do.

What kind of people have we become, that we can be told to accept unnecessary loss of human life as the best we can expect? Has death become the new normal? And how many deaths are we willing to accept? Will we tolerate what that late ghoul, His Royal Virus Prince Philip, saw as necessary—the wiping out of billions to cull the human herd? Is that what is meant when we talk of seeking herd immunity?

Those who are smug, who might think that it will be only people like Africans or Afghans who will die, should do the math. In Philip’s evil calculus, there are large numbers of white people who must die as well.

Death must never become the new normal. Unnecessary death by disease or in warfare that can be prevented, can be defeated. The disciples of death must never be listened to, lest all of us pay the price for such immoral folly. Instead, I urge you to listen to the wise counsel of Helga LaRouche, who sees us as capable of so much more. Africa stands ready to fight for the future survival of the human race.

Thank you.

Schiller Institute Petition Calls for Int. Conference:

A New Security, Development Architecture for All Nations

The following appeal is being circulated internationally by the Schiller Institute. LaRouche Independent candidate Diane Sare has endorsed this petition.

Special to New Federalist In light of the escalating Ukraine crisis, people around the world are urgently asking themselves and their political leaders where this will all end. Is this heading towards a very big, perhaps even thermo-nuclear, global confrontation? Are we facing a reverse, more dangerous Cuban Missile Crisis? Will Mankind even survive? Behind this very real danger of war, and the cause of that danger, is the blowout of the entire trans-Atlantic financial system. A nearly $2 quadrillion speculative bubble of derivatives and debt is already blowing apart. A hyperinflationary process has been unleashed globally, with an accompanying collapse of the physical economies of the Western nations. The City of London and Wall Street, the owners of that bankrupt system, are desperate to destroy any functioning alternative to their system—such as Russia and China’s alliance around the Belt and Road Initiative, which now incorporates nearly 150 nations—and the financial Establishment has openly stated that this is what is at stake. So has Vladimir Putin, who has correctly said that the U.S./U.K./NATO relentless expansion eastward up to Russia’s very borders, is driven by this economic policy, and that it threatens Russia’s national security in ways Russia cannot accept. Therefore, to stop the drive to war, it is necessary to adopt a more fundamental approach, which is to establish an entirely New Paradigm that will ensure the security, and the economic development, of every nation on the planet. The only recent precedent for this in the West, is the 1648 Treaty of Westphalia, which put an end to 150 years of religious wars in Europe. It was crafted only at the point that all parties realized that, if they continued on their current path, there would be no winners and very few survivors. They chose to create a New Paradigm based on the defense of the interest of the other, and on the premise that the security of all was the first requirement for the security of each party. That is the key lesson of the Treaty of Westphalia for today. The world today stands at a similar crossroads. If the current geopolitical policies continue, nuclear war becomes a very real possibility—after which there would be

by Charles Notley HOUSTON, March 16—Joel Dejean, LaRouche Independent candidate for U.S. Congress (TX-38), began his remarks on Diane Sare’s March 11 Symposium by attacking both the insanity of decarbonization and Biden’s comments on the sanctions imposed on Russian commodities. “I now recognize what we here in Texas were doing in February 2021 during the freeze and blackouts: We were ‘freezing for freedom.’ I didn’t appreciate it at the time.” He attacked the U.S. sanctions policy designed to destroy Russia, which will also halt all joint scientific collaboration, especially in space and fusion power development, which is a crucial feature of the late Lyndon LaRouche’s Four Laws. Born in Haiti and educated in New York State, Dejean uniquely brings to his constituents the expertise of an electrical engineer, combined with the power, passion, and program of decades of education and activism with the international LaRouche movement. Created after the 2020 census by a GOP-dominated legislature, the gerrymandered 38th CD encompasses most of greater Houston’s Energy Corridor; it was actually custom made to ensure that another Republican would be elected to the House of Representatives. Hunt Supports New War The appointed one this election cycle is Capt. Wesley Parish Hunt, a West Point graduate who piloted Apache helicopters in the Iraq War. In his red, white, and blue socks, “Texas Reloaded”, Dejean’s opponent Hunt is among those shown happily joining former U.S. Navy SEAL officer and current Republican Congressman from Texas’ 7th C.D., Dan Crenshaw, in a military-style “mission” of fellow Texas GOP vets to “retake Congress.” In sharp contrast to the warmongers, Dejean has endorsed Helga Zepp-LaRouche’s call, issued by the Schiller Institute, to convene a conference of nations for a New Security and Development Architecture, stating that “in a new paradigm of peace through development, Houston and the state of Texas can play a leading role. I bring that vision to my campaign, and will bring it to the U.S. Congress if elected. Petitioning to place Dejean’s name on the ballot begins May 26 and ends June 23. He will need 500 valid signatures. Visit the Dejean campaign website at joeldejean-forcongress.com.

Let’s shut it down.”

“President Biden must be told to stop lying about ‘sacrificing for freedom’ and be forced instead to declare an economic emergency,” she said. “He should use his executive powers to freeze the price of petroleum products including gasoline at around $2.50/gallon. no winners, and most probably no survivors. Instead, an international conference must immediately be convoked along the lines of the Peace of Westphalia. The fundamental interest of all of the parties is to ensure that the central economic and security interests of each are taken care of—in other words, an order based on the benefit of the other, on the common good or the General Welfare, and on an underlying love of all Mankind. The economic system must also be drastically reshaped to express this outlook. The renowned American economist Lyndon LaRouche specified in great detail how such a system would work, based on what he called his Four Laws: The immediate re-enactment of the Glass–Steagall law instituted by U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, without modification, as to principle of action. This means putting the entire speculative financial bubble through bankruptcy reorganization. Interview With Farzana Niemann, Farzana Foundation

Where Is the Outcry Over Deaths in Afghanistan?

Special to New Federalist New York, March 13—While the headlines are filled with non-stop wartime propaganda concerning Russia and Ukraine, the plight of the people of Afghanistan is hidden from public view. As of this writing, over 23 million people in that war torn land are without food, and millions of children are facing death through starvation which could be prevented if the Biden Administration would return $7 billion which is rightfully the money of the Afghan Central bank, but instead was diverted to the 9/11 Families and unknown relief agencies. This interview with Farzana Niemann of the Farzana Foundation was conducted by LaRouche Independent U.S. Senate candidate Diane Sare on March 13.

Sare: Farzana, you have a very interesting background, and I’m wondering if you could just tell us a little bit about yourself and how you came to be doing this. FF: Yes, I was born in Afghanistan. I was born in Afghanistan and grew up in Afghanistan. And in 1979 when the Russians invaded Afghanistan, my father, my mom, my family moved away from Afghanistan. We traveled to Dubai and lived in Dubai for a while, and then we moved to Germany. And I grew up in Germany. But my parents are both from Afghanistan, from Herat city, the second biggest city in Afghanistan, on the border of Iran. Sare: Do you have memories of the fighting in Afghanistan? FF: Yes, I do, I do have memories from the war. I think about two years, I did live as a child in a war. I have a lot of different memories. I’ve seen planes flying over the house, I’ve seen bombs exploding next to our house and I saw bodies. I saw a hand on the street. So a dog was running with a hand in its mouth. It was just horrible scenes that I’ve seen at that time as a child, and I was very happy when we arrived in Iran for the first time in the morning after two years of war. Growing Up In War Zone Sare: So, you don’t have to imagine what it’s like to grow up in a war zone, you know. FF: Exactly. It’s very, very sad. Yes, that’s why I’m also very sad right now for a couple of weeks. Every time I hear any war in the world, the memories come again. And I don’t understand war. And the only thing I’m supporting in the world is, of course, peace. And happiness, that’s what we are all, of course, supporting. We have a non-profit organization helping the women, and we are planning, hopefully after water wells, to be able to build schools in Afghanistan. This is my next goal. I always wanted women in Afghanistan to be educated. It was a very important part of my father’s life, too. He was always trying to educate Afghan people. He passed away, unfortunately, a couple of years ago, but when he was alive, he wrote a book about the Afghan language, the old Farsi Dari, which is the Persian language. Operation Ibn Sina Sare: Now, speaking of women, another woman, Helga Zepp-LaRouche, who founded the Schiller Institute, has called for Project Ibn Sina, after the father of modern medicine who came from this region. And her specific proposal is that given the crisis, rather than trying to come up with a political settlement or a government that everyone likes, something to help the people immediately and build a modern health care system. FF: Yes. Oh my, yes. Yes, that’s right. That’s just another topic that you are mentioning. That’s right. We need a lot of people to support ate high-productivity trends in improvements of employment; with the accompanying intention, to increase the physical-economic productivity, and the standard of living, of the persons and households. Adopt a fusion-driver ‘crash program’ to promote the fundamental breakthroughs in science which unlimited economic growth and development require. The Schiller Institute and its founder Helga Zepp-LaRouche issue this call to initiate the urgent international discussion that is needed to convoke such a conference, and stop the so-called “Doomsday Clock” before it strikes midnight. It is time for institutions and individuals from every nation to step forward and join the mobilization for an international conference to establish a new security and development architecture for all nations. lage near Herat. That’s the way they live in the winter. And as you can see in one of the pictures, the shoes they are putting on are summer shoes. They don’t have enough clothing to keep warm, and that’s the way they live. And as you see in the background, the house is built by hand, on their own. There’s no access to water, access to electricity. Sare: Tell me something about the effect of these wells you were building before the sanctions. FF: With the wells we are building, we can access fresh water from the Earth under the ground. This is very clean and healthy water. Let’s say one where I was, it would be enough to collect water from that for the whole little village. Sare: Since the United States and NATO withdrew from Afghanistan, it’s become very difficult. FF: Yes, it is. Everything in Afghanistan right now, everything got expensive, like food. Everything is extremely expensive and people literally die just for not having food. Another topic is in the last couple of months, people are just trying to find somebody that they can sell their children to. There was a gentleman who was selling his children for about four children. But there are many other people who are living on the street, and they lost everything. And the winters are very harsh. The way they try to heat is they burn wood. The situation is so bad and nobody really talks about Afghanistan anymore. Right? And that’s the saddest thing. And that’s why I have to work harder now to try to bring this awareness more out there. It’s even worse now, because at the beginning, at least the American war in Afghanistan, people knew of Afghanistan, but people don’t talk about it anymore. It’s just gone. But the people are there. They die and there are millions of people. And it’s very sad. Very, very sad. Also, people are not able to go to the bank to withdraw money. I still have money in the account here for the personal foundation, the donations I collected in December. I’m still unable to send it to them because they’re not going to be able to collect more than $200 a day. So, they block the money, and they don’t let Afghan people have the money and probably they want them to die, starve to death. Sare: That’s what it looks like. Thank you for talking to me about this emergency, so we can make people aware of the situation, and also the work of your foundation.
