

Annie Grattidge

MERI Coordinator

“Informed decision making and continual improvement through adaptive management is my focus. I’m keen to work with a diversity of groups and help bridge the divides between knowledge systems, strategic management and community development.”

Based in Darwin, Annie has extensive experience facilitating natural resource management in a range of capacities, with a history in both the public, private and non-government sectors. Annie’s background includes: designing and delivering environmental assessments and management plans (fauna, vegetation and other aspects) as well as community engagement and capacity building to strengthen project and program strategy and avenues for continual improvement through effective monitoring and evaluation.

Annie has worked in the Northern Territory for over 25 years in both semi-arid and topical landscapes. Annie’s had experience as a facilitator building a regional approach for Natural Resource Management programs. She has had input into the trial and development of National frameworks and approach for MERI and performance reporting as a Territory wide Coordinator. Annie has several years as a senior environmental consultant undertaking impact assessments and she’s also experienced with the practical requirements for managing and implementing indigenous ranger programs and natural resource management programs.

Annie’s skills and keen interest includes working with spatial and species data for analysis, making maps and gathering stakeholder opinions to ensure management policies and actions are well informed.

Annie specialises in:

Monitoring, evaluation, reporting and improvement | Integrating science and other knowledge systems into management frameworks | Designing and delivering effective & efficient program management | Communicating complex information and making this accessible to a broad audience | Community engagement | Facilitating relationships and partnerships between organisations | Progressing innovative ideas to fill information gaps
