

Rebecca Schneider

Project Support Officer

“People sit at the heart of any conservation effort. Truly understanding people’s needs, relationships with the landscape, their history and their aspirations is key to understanding what drives their decision making and sets the foundation for establishing meaningful and sustainable landscape management.”

Based in Adelaide, South Australia, Rebecca is an experienced account and project manager in social and environmentally focused organisations. She has worked in a diversity of industries, business landscapes and cultures, with roles in agricultural development, the food and beverage industry, and certification systems.

Rebecca is skilled in business development, relationship building, project delivery, strategic planning, product and supply chain certification, fundraising, grant management, event planning and promotional activity. Driven to deliver meaningful outcomes for people, businesses, and planet, she is passionate about supporting Conservation Management’s network of people in meeting their goals.

Rebecca specialises in:

Project and team support | Working with partners, people, and communities | Information analysis and synthesis | Reporting and data storage | Plan write-up and documentation | Communications product development.
