

VOICES OF BEROWRA

Be Heard, Be Represented

Hello from Voices of Berowra!

We're back in action after a period of relative quiet, ready and rearing to go.

It's been quite the time in Federal politics - the on-again, off-again relationship between the Coalition partners, a (dare we say, inevitable) change in Liberal leadership, and the rise of a protest voice in the form of a resurgent One Nation. The Farrer by-election in early May will give us another glimpse into the current tumultuous state of Australian politics.

Here at Voices of Berowra, we're watching all this with interest. Kos Samaras, a pollster and political commentator, reaffirms what the Community Independents movement has known for a while: the two-party system is in structural decline and the political and polling "rules" of the past no longer apply:

"We are not in a normal political period. We are in the middle of a structural realignment.... The country is in transition."

Lack of faith in the two-party system can result in ugly populism, but in Australia it is also fuelling the Community Independents movement -- a movement founded on the hope for transparency, accountability, integrity and fairness in politics.

What does this mean for the electorate of Berowra? Well, it certainly suggests that change is possible. We're now officially a marginal seat.

Out and About with Voices of Berowra

The heart and soul of the Voices movement is listening to the community. Our members have started hitting the streets again to hear what local residents have to say about what matters most to them and how well they feel Australian politics is representing them.

We have fliers to give out, but we are also keen to engage with you in genuine and respectful conversations. Look out for us at train stations and markets over the coming months, and come up and say hi.

And if you'd like to join our volunteers, let us know! We'd love to have you.

Have your say

We'd like to know what you love about living in the Berowra electorate; what matters to you; and which issues you think don't receive the attention they deserve.

Have your say using our brand-new community survey.

Coming Soon

Voices of Berowra are organising a series of public events with expert panelists discussing issues that the community is telling us it cares about.

Stay tuned for news of these events.
