

As an English teacher, I rely heavily on the librarians at my school for both reading and writing (kids still need to know how to research!) in our curriculum. The library is also a place where our students get extra homework help, a quiet place to make up tests, and help finding resources for all their classes. Limiting librarians would be like shooting education in the foot. Please reconsider this idea. Thank you.

--

Nancy Robinson
Laurel High School
English