Alumni Features and Updates

Michael Conway - WG '92

Group President, International and Channel Development: Starbucks featured on The Forbes CEO Next List: 2022

"When recruiters cite companies that cultivate great leaders, Starbucks is often on the list, with Conway as the "rock star" example. Having excelled in numerous key roles over the past decade, Conway now leads operations in 80 markets while forging new channels and partnerships for the brand. Praised as a strong multichannel operator with extensive global experience, Conway's name repeatedly comes up when talking with CEO recruiters."

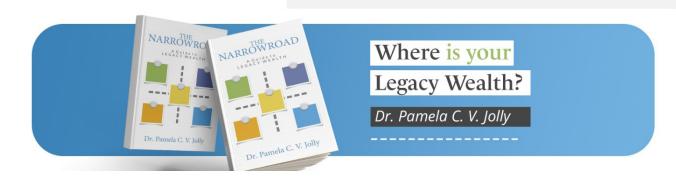

Pamela Jolly - WG '00

The first step toward "the business of you" is a self-analysis through the wealth builder lens, taking full ownership of the promise and the purpose we have inherited as business owners of ourselves.

I wrote The NarrowRoad™: A Guide to Legacy Wealth to help readers find their unique answers to wealth their way, offering a culturally relevant guide towards reaching their full wealth potential in their lifetime.

Reciprocity Ring: Sharing and Paying It Forward

Derek Murphy - Head of Business Development at Audible says "We're hiring @ Audible! Great role to develop strategic partnerships that delight our customers. Please reach out to me if you're interested or know great candidates. Thanks!" Contact Derek on LinkedIn

Rev Murayi - Director Strategic Planning at Aetna says "Hey all - I have a friend who is recruiting for a Chief of Staff role to report to the CEO of a PE back private equity health-care technology firm. The role would be a remote role with some business travel. The CEO is looking for an early career (2-3 years post MBA) minority candidate with health-care and consulting experience. If all goes well, this role could lead to a P&L leadership role. If you or someone you know fits the profile - please let me know. Job Description
